REPUBLICAN CONVENTION AT PORTLAND, ME.

GRAND MASS MEETING.

THE SLAVERY ISSUE DISCUSSED.

Speeches by John P. Hale and others. Prospects.

PORTLAND, Me., Tuesday, Aug. 14.

A Mass Republican State Convention is now in session here, and about 1,000 people are present. Among the speakers are Senator John P. Hale and Rufus K. Wells, Esq., of Hampshire. Mr. ASHE of Ohio, and R. F. Stevens, Esq., of New-York.

The hall where they assembled had to an adjournment in the afternoon from Deering Hall to a large grove near the city. Dr. Newman, of Bath, presided when there was a President, representing the principal Counties of the State. Hon. B. F. Stevens, of New-York, was not present from illness.

Hon. B. F. WADE, of Ohio, was the first speaker introduced.

He thought there was but one issue before the people and that was the extension of Slavery. He said the Whig party is not only [illegible] but the Democratic party of their own State. He said, he thought the Whig party is not the party of freedom, but the uprising of the people to prevent great calamities and perpetuate freedom. It was [illegible] that the Republican movement of the Union, and he was in favor of it as a means of [illegible] the great principle of freedom. He thought it was in no sort of danger from the party out of the South.

The President then read a letter from Hon. B. F. Stevens of New-York, of which the following is an extract:

"In regard to the success of the Republican Convention which is to assemble at your State, I am free to say, that, while I think it is premature to indulge in any very sanguine local prophecies, in anticipation of which the people of another State are divided, I have confirmed and will rejoice in every demonstration of the popular sentiment in the Free States against the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and against the extension and influence of that principle of [illegible] which the Southern and majority of the [illegible] in the Free States not satisfied with saying they do not [illegible]. If it cannot be received [illegible] and which [illegible] the extension of [illegible] in the Territories and with the admission of Free States. In laboring to accomplish this [illegible] the Republicans of Maine are [illegible] well. They have my hearty [illegible] and any [illegible] success.

Hon. [illegible], of Connecticut, was the next speaker. He was from the Democratic party. It was impossible to dissolve the Union. The South would not live one week with it dissolved. In allusion to the Administration of Buchanan, and that of Pierce, he said the contract struck him, and he would not dwell upon it. He was [illegible] upon the Administration and its supporters, and was enthusiastically cheered throughout.

Hon. JOHN P. HALE, of New-Hampshire, followed in a very amusing and apposite speech, in which the Slave power came in for a serious lashing.

At the close of Mr. Hale's speech, Mr. STEVENS, Chairman of the Committee on resolutions, reported resolutions declaring in favor the opinion of the Republican party, that Congress, [illegible] the present construction of the Constitution, is in favor of the doctrine of impartial protection of that description of property which [illegible] until it shall [illegible] slavery in the District of Columbia—that the Fugitive Slave Law is unconstitutional, and ought to be repealed; and unconditionally repealed; that it is the right and duty of Congress to prohibit the introduction of new Slave States—that Territories of Nebraska and Kansas should be [illegible] that the Republican party accept the principles and policy which regard slavery sectional and freedom national.

The last resolution strongly recommends Governor Morrill to the suffrages of the people for a reelection.

A resolution was demanded by the people on the subject of Temperance, and the Committee presented one, which, with the others, was adopted, declaring the perpetuation and extension of the Maine Law to be one of the fundamental principles of the Republican party of Maine.

Speeches were also made by Mr. STEVENS, of the Temperance Journal, and Mr. RICHMOND, a delegate to the recent Philadelphia Convention, endorsing the Republican movement.

A meeting was held this evening at Deering's Hall, at which Mr. HALE, of New-Hampshire, spoke.

The number of persons present at the meeting in the afternoon is estimated at from ten to twelve thousand.

Hicks*, of New-Haven, was struck by lightning, and so badly damaged that she was subsequently abandoned. The schooner Mary Caroline was wrecked.

The Delta has private letters from Mexico which state that arrests were being made daily in the City of Mexico, as many as sixty having been arrested on one day. Among the prisoners are two Americans.

A great conspiracy is said to have been discovered by the police while searching for criminals, in a convent which had been subjected to inquisition, and several priests were arrested.

Comonfort it was rumored was in the hands of the revolutionists.

General ALVAREZ had gone out to fight COMONFORT, the revolutionary leader.

It was ascertained at the latest moment that the Conducta which had left Tampico on the 10th of July, for Vera Cruz, with $1,500,000, had been taken by the revolutionists. In the engagement which ensued, forty of the Government troops were killed, and of the remainder, 200 had gone over to ALVAREZ.

NEW-ORLEANS, Tuesday, Aug. 14.

The steamer Neptune, from Brownsville on the 6th, and Galveston on the 10th inst., has arrived here.

The Delta's correspondence contains an official account of VIDAURRI's capture of Saltillo, after five days' fighting. The Government troops were 1,200 strong, with five pieces of artillery. The Revolutionists lost thirty-eight men, while two-thirds of the Government troops were either killed, wounded or taken prisoners. The Revolutionists were in pursuit of the retreating army.

General WEBB had been reinforced at Matamoras from Tampico.

The force of the Revolutionists was 2,000, with eleven pieces of artillery, and they were under the command of Col. DUNCAN, late of the U. S. Army.

Secret Movement in Massachusetts.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Tuesday, Aug. 14.

A meeting to initiate a fusion of the Anti-Administration feeling of this Commonwealth, with a new secretion organization, is to be held at Cheney's Hall, on Thursday morning. FROM WASHINGTON.

Recess of the Foreign Diplomatic Corps—The Union on the Louisville Riots—Vir[illegible] Preparing for a Dreadful Contingency.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Aug. 13, 1855.

I observed that most of the foreign diplomatic corps has returned, including the Mexican, British and Russian Ministers. The leave of absence from this capital lately granted to Gen. ALMONTE was the longest ever extended to a Mexican Minister in this country. The rumored accession of SANTA ANNA's stepfather-in-law to this mission remains in doubt. His ability is not comparable to that of the present minister; but as the most arduous duty of any minister will be to receive the three millions forthcoming under the Mesilla Treaty, it is presumed that his talents are at least equal to any emergency likely to arise.

The Union has seized upon the Louisville riots as the occasion for a series of bitter partisan articles against the Know-Nothings. It chooses to forget that the leading Anti-Know-Nothing candidate in Louisville was a Whig—that a very large amount of the property destroyed belonged to that Whig candidate, and that the mass of the actual rioters were Democratic converts to the new Order. Beside, there is no question that the violent language of the Louisville Democratic Press, prior to the election, had a powerful influence in stirring up both sides to violence. But more than all, let it be remembered that the constant approval of the Union and affiliated presses—their denunciations, admonitions and provocations, were the cause of much greater outrages by lawless sisters upon the ballot-boxes of Kansas, than it is alleged were committed, or attempted, by the Know-Nothings at Louisville—and that those outrages would have produced the like bloody scenes, had the Northern settlers in Kansas been prepared with arms to resist them.

The Virginia Democracy is putting its house in order for a dreadful contingency—packing its bags, as I may say, for a long journey. Foreseeing the probability of dissolution, the Richmond Enquirer proposes to provide for it by raising a standing army for Virginia. The State already has a West Point Academy of her own, in the shape of a military Institute, which has done something for the defense against the Yankees. But something more effective is demanded by the state of the times. It is proposed to reorganize the militia entirely, and establish a system of military conscription and service like that of Austria, by which 20,000 men shall be kept constantly under arms, and ready to march to the scene of action at the tap of the drum.

The occasion and the manner of dissolution are thus stated:

"In a few years Kansas will probably ask admission into the Union as a Slave State, and may be refused. It needs but Freesoil predominance in the House of Representatives to achieve this end. If refused admission into this Union, she will undoubtedly be received by another, and The United States, South, will begin their career. This proposition is too clear for argument. Nothing but rank cowardice could induce the South to acquiesce in the exclusion of a Slave State on the score of Slavery. We assume, therefore, that the South will not acquiesce, and consequently, we fear that, in a few years, Mason and Dixon's line may be the boundary of foreign powers."

This was exactly the language held in 1850 in respect to the admission of California. It was an Abolition State, and if admitted the South would set up a new confederacy. California was admitted and the South did not secede. But let it be remembered, that the South did successfully resist the admission of the new State during a furious struggle of nine months, and the North prevailed at last on that one point only by granting concessions which have been the source of all our present troubles. It is not too much to say that the "Compromise" of 1850 was the procuror of the Congressional and Executive outrages of 1854, the agitation resulting from which is expected by the Richmond Enquirer to shiver the Union. The South threatens secession again in a contingency of her own manufacture. The simple question is, will the North yield again? In my judgment she will, and not only Kansas but Nebraska will be admitted as Slave States. But it is possible that she will not, and if she do not here we have the Richmond platform—a Southern confederacy, with a serried phalanx of rifles and bayonets along the the frontier.

In this view of the case the proposition to commence arming now is sensible and practical. The project of a large standing army and a system of military roads, is well worthy of the consideration of the Legislature, to which it is recommended. These suggested preparations for war at the South are pregnant signs of the times. They should be widely circulated through the conservative press of the North, for, of course, all the dangers around and before us will be instantly removed by the cessation of Northern opposition to Southern demands.

The Court journals have noted out a new danger to our glorious Constitution. They are now distressed for the independence of the Federal Judiciary. The Freedom of the Northern press in condemning the conduct of Judge KANE in the WILLIAMSON case, leads them to apprehend that some effectual means will be adopted to prevent the repetition of such outrages. The apprehension is certainly not unfounded. The moment Southern supremacy in the legislative and Executive departments of the Government shall be thrown off, that moment the reformation of the Judiciary will begin. The Supreme Court will be reorganized. A Northern majority, proportioned to the popular majority in that section and its preponderancy in political power, will be substituted for the present Southern majority. And, what is more important, the men appointed to that bench, both from North and South, will be men of sound constitutional principles, utterly opposed to the extension of Slavery, and to its monstrous pretensions as a national institution. Of course, some of the present district judges will be impeached, removed or otherwise punished, on manifest corruption and tyranny in the exercise of their functions. These instrumentes of usurpation are playing a game which can end only in the establishment of outlawed despotism or in a revolution. If they succeed in their designs, the friends of regulated liberty will expect to suffer from their vengeance; if they fail, the majesty of the law will be vindicated in the retribution they will receive. Sorrily instructive is JEFFREY, the fate of that wretch may be their own.

Upon the whole, there is no revolution in modern history that was more logically conducted or more temperately carried forward to its destined ends than that of 1688. There is a surprising analogy between our present condition and that of England from the death of CHARLES to the expulsion of JAMES. For twenty-five years the monarchs had struggled to enforce the principles of absolute power. In order to complete the work, James called the Judiciary to his aid, and selected the Judges as the favorite instruments of his schemes. Everything was done in the name of the law. Oppression the most intolerable and principles the most abominable were sanctified by the solemn decisions of the Judges. The whole plot against public liberty would have been executed securely and in order, had the people submitted. They did not submit. The chief judicial conspirator—not the worst, but the most notoriously infamous—was thrown into prison, and died miserably. The rest were dismissed in disgrace and ended their careers in the obscurity for which they were indebted to the contempt and the clemency of the victors in the struggle.

In the United States the same scenes are in progress. For about the same length of time the Government has been engaged in forcing upon the country doctrines and principles directly opposed to and subversive of the Constitution. Every expedient has been adopted to effect a legal revolution, by which the majority of the people shall be proscribed and degraded for the advantage of the minority. This long course of outrage is near its fulfilment. A crisis has arrived, on the termination of which depends the question whether this Union is to continue a confederation of Republican States, or whether it is to become an absolute secession despotism with a landed aristocracy ruling through an elective executive, of its own choice, on one side, and dependent provinces and a conquered people on the other.

If the cause of the people and the Constitution triumph, beside the reformation and purification of the Judiciary, which I have noticed, an act of indemnity will be passed, by which all who have suffered in body, estate or reputation through such outrages as that just inflicted upon Mr. WILLIAMSON, will be liberally compensated. The Destroyers of our Grain.

In looking over our Wheat reports to ascertain, if possible, the relative amount of damage the crop has received from each class of the pestiferous destructive insects, we have been surprised at the confusion of terms in names used in the descriptions. Indeed, there seems to be no intelligible comprehension of the difference between these various insects. Thus, from the same town where all the injurious results appear to be traceable to the same cause, we have one writer saying, "We shall lose half our crop by the weevil;" another says, "The fly is doing us immense harm;" and another still more cautious in making a distinction—writes, "Much injury was dealt from the insect, but it will be less than was antici[illegible]." These three reports from a single town are [illegible]

It would materially assist investigations upon these insects, and also convey a more definite idea of the character and amount of injury to be estimated, if editors and all others reporting upon this matter, would state exactly what kind of "insect" is at work in their several localities. To facilitate such a course we will give a brief description of some of the more generally destructive "insects" that prey especially upon the wheat crop. Among these are the Grain Weevil, the Hessian Fly, the Clear-winged Fly or Wheat Midge, several varieties of Grain Moth, the Chintz or Chinch Bug, &c.

THE GRAIN WEEVIL (Calandra Granaria, or Curculio Granarius of LINNÆUS.)—There is a wrong impression as to the character of this insect, and especially in reference to the time of its chief depredations. Quite early in the Spring, while wheat was not yet in blossom, reports came from some interior counties of Michigan that the weevil was thus early committing extensive depredations. From many other localities we heard similar reports, but a little later in the season. These were founded in misconception, for the truth is the weevil proper preys only upon the grain, commencing its ravages about the time of its ripening, and continuing them long after it is gathered into the granary; hence the name of grain or granary weevil.

The grain weevil in its perfect state is a dark or pitchy red, winged beetle or bug, about a line and a half, or one-eighth of an inch long. It has a slender proboscis or snout, carving a little downwards. The thorax, or chest, constitutes about one-half of its body, and is nearly as large as the abdomen, or belly, lying back of the middle ring. The thorax is punctured with a large number of holes, giving it a rough appearance. Over the abdomen are delicate wings, which are shielded by wing covers, having lines or furrows upon their upper surface running parallel with their length. The wings do not entirely cover the tip of the abdomen. The female punctures the ripening or ripened grain with her beak or rostrum and deposits one and sometimes two eggs. From the egg is hatched a grub or worm, which eats its way into the grain, closing up the aperture behind it with excrements so that it lies perfectly shielded from external injury. No mechanical action short of crushing the kernel can disturb the destroyer. They are effectually destroyed by kiln-drying the grain. This worm or grub grows to about one twelfth of an inch in length; its body is white and soft, with nine rings around it. The head is small, round, yellow colored, and provided with cutting instruments. Arriving at maturity, which is not till after the four portion of the wheat kernel has been principally devoured, this worm or larva assumes a nymph or chrysalis state, (like that between the worm and the butterfly,) and within two weeks after the perfect weevil is formed, which eats its way out through the shell, and goes forth to deposit its eggs in turn upon other sound kernels. They are very productive, a single pair often multiplying to five or six thousand in a single year. Both the perfect insect and the grub feed upon the grain.

THE HESSIAN FLY, (Cecidomya destructor,) is so named because introduced, or supposed to have been, by the Hessian soldiers employed by the British during the Revolutionary war. It was first discovered in the vicinity of New-York, from which point it extended in all directions, its usual rate of advance being from 15 to 25 miles a year. The full grown Hessian Fly is nearly the size of a small musquito, which it resembles in general form. It has, however, no bill for sucking blood, and has proportionately a larger thorax or chest, and a smaller abdomen or belly than the musquito. There are two broods hatched annually, from eggs deposited in September and May. The full-grown fly deposits its eggs, which are very small, upon grains, in the upper extremity of the wheat leaf, one, after the stalk begins to branch. As this takes place in September or early in October, late sown wheat usually escapes the Autumn egg. These eggs hatch out in about 10 days, producing a small worm, which works its way down between the leaf sheath and stalk to a point below the surface of the ground, where, in the form of a white or spotted maggot, it lies quiescent, and sucks out the juice of the plant. In a few weeks it undergoes a full growth, and changes to a pupa or chrysalis state, of a cone-like or diamond shape. In this state it lies until the following Spring, when the perfect fly comes forth and deposits a second brood of eggs, which attack the wheat stalks above the ground, but near the lower joints. The juice extracted weakens the stalk and it crinkles down. Its effects are not very visible until the stalk has attained nearly its full growth, when by going through a field the extent of its depredations is generally known by the number of lodged or fallen stalks. The skinned grub when present may be found much earlier by carefully stripping down the leaf sheath from the still green and upright stalk. Since the point of attack is usually below the gathered portion of the straw, the grub is left in the field, where it undergoes its transformation to come out the perfect fly again in Autumn. It is on this account that burning the stubble soon after harvest has proved a partial remedy against future attacks. There is a parasitic insect enemy, which multiplies faster than the Hessian fly, and to which we are indebted for the disappearance of this pest after its prevalence during a few years in any locality.

THE CLEAR-WINGED WHEAT FLY, (Cecidomya Tritici.)—This fly, by many called the MIDGE or WHEAT GNAT, resembles the Hessian fly in general form and size, but differs from it in having an orange-colored instead of black body, clear or transparent wings instead of dark; its antennæ or horns are longer and more fringed, its legs are longer and more slender, and its abdomen is covered with short hairs and blunt at the extremity, instead of smooth and pointed like that of the Hessian fly. It undergoes its changes in the soil and attacks the blossoms and immature grain instead of the straw. These distinctions should be studied, for upon a clear understanding of them depends the treatment to be pursued.

The clear winged wheat fly commonly deposits among the grass and leaves during clear midday; but morning, evening, and on cloudy days, they appear in swarms over a wheat field, and deposit their eggs in the heads. In the course of a week or so these eggs hatch out orange-colored maggots which feed upon the pollen of the flower, and finally attach themselves to the soft grain. They cannot injure the kernel after it has acquired some degree of hardness. They do not make their appearance until the latter part of June or forepart of July, according to the latitude, and only attack the wheat while in a soft state, and on this account early wheat escapes injury. Using only the early, hardy vegetables, or sowing early, and forcing to quick maturity with guano or other stimulating manures, are the best known means of escaping their ravages. The yellow or orange colored maggots are easily observed—there frequently being as many as twenty or thirty, or more of them, on a single wheat head. We have often found several of them on a single kernel, upon carefully removing the chaff or sheath. From the imperfect descriptions given, we think that much the greatest "insect" injury of this present season has been done by this species. During the latter part of July and the fore part of August, the maggots or worms obtain their full size, cast off their skins, descend to the ground and bury themselves half an inch or so below the surface, where they remain during the Winter, and come forth perfect flies the following season, to continue and multiply their depredations. It is against this fly that sprinkling lime over the growing wheat, burning sulphur in the field, and such-like means, have proved a partial remedy.

THE GRAIN MOTH (Tinea Granella,) when fully developed, is a small winged insect, a little resembling a butterfly in its general form. Upon its head is a white hairy tuft, and two short antennæ or horns. Its fore wings are mottled with black, white and intermediate colors, always with one black rectangular or square spot near the middle of the outer edge. The eggs are deposited in Spring, and again in the latter part of the Summer. The first brood are hatched in July, and take the form of a sixteen-legged caterpillar, with a naked soft body, nearly half an inch in length. They gnaw the surface of the grain, and cover it with a thick web, which sometimes fastens together a number of kernels. After a time these caterpillars spin a cocoon, in which they undergo the usual transformations, like those of the butterfly.

The ANGOUMOIS MOTH (Anacampsis cerealella) is another grain moth, which has proved immensely destructive in France, especially in the province of Angoumois, from whence it derives its name; and the same moth, or one very similar, has appeared in this country. The perfect insect is a very small moth, of a pale cinnamon brown color, and satin lustre. Its wings are long, narrow, broadly fringed and ash or lead-colored. It has two thread-like antennæ or horns consisting of numerous beaded joints; a spiral tongue of moderate length, and two tapering feelers turned back over the head. It lays twenty or more eggs upon each of three or four wheat grains, and within a week these hatch out little worm-like caterpillars not thicker than a hair, which immediately disperse, each selecting a single grain and burrowing into its most tender part. Within the grain (and not upon the surface like the grain-moth) it devours all the heart portion, then spins a web to divide its cell into two cavities, in one of which it deposits its excrements or rejected fragments of food, and in the other it undergoes its transformations preparatory to coming forth a perfect moth. These, like the grain weevil, may be destroyed by kiln-drying.

There are several other species of grain-moths, but they are yet imperfectly known, and have not been generally destructive.

CHINTZ or CHINCH BUG (Lygæus leucopterus.) This insect has proved more destructive in Virginia and other Southern States than at the North. In its perfect state it has a black downy body about one-sixth of an inch in length, and is readily distinguished by its white wing-covers, upon each of which there is a short, black central line, and a large black oval spot upon the margin. They do not arrive at their perfect state until about the time the wheat is ready to cut. Previous to this they are without wings and resemble the bed bug in odor and color. It is at this time that they are most destructive. From the eggs laid in the ground the previous season, the young come forth in the Southern States in May, and in the West or North,—at first of a bright red color, but changing with age to brown and black. They travel from field to field in immense columns, like Locusts, destroying everything as they proceed. They destroy wheat by attaching themselves to the green stalk and sucking out the entire moisture. They have been arrested in their course by running ditches across their paths, and filling them with fire stuff which is set on fire when the bugs are seen thickest in them.

It would materially assist investigations upon these insects, and also convey a more definite idea of the character and amount of injury to be estimated, if editors and all others reporting upon this matter, would state exactly what kind of "insect" is at work in their several localities. To facilitate such a course we will give a brief description of some of the more generally destructive "insects" that prey especially upon the wheat crop. Among these are the Grain Weevil, the Hessian Fly, the Clear-winged Fly or Wheat Midge, several varieties of Grain Moth, the Chintz or Chinch Bug, &c.

THE GRAIN WEEVIL (Calandra Granaria, or Curculio Granarius of LINNÆUS.)—There is a wrong impression as to the character of this insect, and especially in reference to the time of its chief depredations. Quite early in the Spring, while wheat was not yet in blossom, reports came from some interior counties of Michigan that the weevil was thus early committing extensive depredations. From many other localities we heard similar reports, but a little later in the season. These were founded in misconception, for the truth is the weevil proper preys only upon the grain, commencing its ravages about the time of its ripening, and continuing them long after it is gathered into the granary; hence the name of grain or granary weevil.

The grain weevil in its perfect state is a dark or pitchy red, winged beetle or bug, about a line and a half, or one-eighth of an inch long. It has a slender proboscis or snout, carving a little downwards. The thorax, or chest, constitutes about one-half of its body, and is nearly as large as the abdomen, or belly, lying back of the middle ring. The thorax is punctured with a large number of holes, giving it a rough appearance. Over the abdomen are delicate wings, which are shielded by wing covers, having lines or furrows upon their upper surface running parallel with their length. The wings do not entirely cover the tip of the abdomen. The female punctures the ripening or ripened grain with her beak or rostrum and deposits one and sometimes two eggs. From the egg is hatched a grub or worm, which eats its way into the grain, closing up the aperture behind it with excrements so that it lies perfectly shielded from external injury. No mechanical action short of crushing the kernel can disturb the destroyer. They are effectually destroyed by kiln-drying the grain. This worm or grub grows to about one twelfth of an inch in length; its body is white and soft, with nine rings around it. The head is small, round, yellow colored, and provided with cutting instruments. Arriving at maturity, which is not till after the four portion of the wheat kernel has been principally devoured, this worm or larva assumes a nymph or chrysalis state, (like that between the worm and the butterfly,) and within two weeks after the perfect weevil is formed, which eats its way out through the shell, and goes forth to deposit its eggs in turn upon other sound kernels. They are very productive, a single pair often multiplying to five or six thousand in a single year. Both the perfect insect and the grub feed upon the grain.

THE HESSIAN FLY, (Cecidomya destructor,) is so named because introduced, or supposed to have been, by the Hessian soldiers employed by the British during the Revolutionary war. It was first discovered in the vicinity of New-York, from which point it extended in all directions, its usual rate of advance being from 15 to 25 miles a year. The full grown Hessian Fly is nearly the size of a small musquito, which it resembles in general form. It has, however, no bill for sucking blood, and has proportionately a larger thorax or chest, and a smaller abdomen or belly than the musquito. There are two broods hatched annually, from eggs deposited in September and May. The full-grown fly deposits its eggs, which are very small, upon grains, in the upper extremity of the wheat leaf, one,

They have also been destroyed by burning the dry leaves of the forest, upon which they have rested.

Interesting Horticulture.

WM. M. STEDMAN, Esq., of Wheeling, Va., has succeeded in obtaining a few grafts of Tamaranda from seeds procured in a confectioner's shop. One of these trees, eight years old, and measurings six inches in diameter, has yearly produced fruit of a quality quite equal to that imported. In addition to its value for fruit, it is a most beautiful ornamental tree, having a rapid growth, perfect metrical form, and beautifully delicate foliage.

This tree is worthy of a trial upon the Western prairies. The seed may be sown either in Fall or Spring, in drills about four inches apart, and covered with two or three inches of light rich soil. It is preferable to sow late in the Fall, in order that the bulls may be acted upon by the frost. When the shoots are about three feet high, they may be transplanted to the sites where they are to remain permanently. A hundred of tamaranda from a [illegible] store will supply any one with seeds for a [illegible]

A Grand Gala Day—and a Serenade.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

HAVANA, Wednesday, Aug. 8, 1855.

Last Sunday was to have been a grand gala day for our military Bands, but a shower passing over the city prevented the display of the loyal galloon trappings and harness of war. Orders announcing the vote of thanks passed by the Cortes on the 20th of June last to General JOSE DE LA CONCHA and the regular and volunteer forces under his command, for their prompt, patriotic and devoted action for the preservation of the public peace and order under the late very threatening aspect, were read at the heads of regiments and battalions at or near their respective quarters. [illegible] Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

[illegible] Aug. 9, 1855.

[illegible] people think the world is com- [illegible] without any reference to their being [illegible] to talk of it to [illegible] "Oh, pshaw!" says a gay bachelor, "it is a great bore to [illegible] to take off my hat every time I walk through the saloon where ladies are."

You [illegible] very well that you are compelled to this [illegible] respect. You sit in bar-rooms and offices and [illegible] rooms, where you dispose of your hat till you feel [illegible] at ease, your convenience, till you feel [illegible] irksome. An elegantly dressed woman is a wholesome restraint, if nothing more, upon rough manners.

Everything that concerns our conduct in life is important. Everything that influences social and domestic [illegible] has not an indirect, but a very direct bearing on State policy, on war and the fate of nations. What is done in Congress, in Parliament and on battlefields, is only the result of social and domestic influences, and the paper has only done half its duty that continually strays from [illegible]

[illegible] ciety of news, literature and heart-improving [illegible] in the one they should have.

There may be a great deal of harm done at watering places. [illegible] here as elsewhere, and there [illegible] folly; there are [illegible] maxims—there are hoops and [illegible] there is ambition, there is display and extravagance; yet there is an abundance of good things and a fusion of light and love, rich and poor, good and evil, which has a happy influence on society. There may be fostered in some a love of amusement and a distaste of quiet pleasures, but those who survive a little variance of the monotony of life, without being unfitted for all its sober duties, might as well be wanted as the Indians treated the papooses who could not swim. It is of little use for them to live.

MINNIE MYRTLE.

FROM NEWPORT.

[illegible] Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

NEWPORT, Thursday, Aug. 9, 1855.

On those afternoons when the tide is high, and the beaches, in consequence, not available for vehicles, the favorite drive is to BATEMAN'S, along the harbor shore, beyond the fort, across the pleasant farm whose owner gives its name to the rock-bound image of the Atlantic, the length of many miles. The carriages gather at a breezy cape whence the ocean spreads to view; thence we see Point Judith without a glass and hail the white phantom of "Beaver Tail," and the heaving light-boat in the offing. Near by, wedged into the rocks, is the weed-grown prow of an old wrecked vessel and the quaintly grave stones of some unknown mariners whose bodies were cast ashore years ago by the pitiless surf. These melancholy trophies of ocean's fury offer a pensive contrast to the cheerful faces beaming from landau, gig and chariot on a Summer day, and the calm blue surface of the sea glistening in the peaceful sunshine.

The cool breeze makes a salubrious sphere in which it is delightful to rest awhile, to gaze on the deep, or talk at ease with the lively group thus assembled to an improvised oceanic reception. The very horses could contentedly, as if aware that all their fine points were admired. A carriage becomes, on these occasions, the confessional of many a lover emboldened to a courageous popping of the question by the invigorating air; and, as it fans the smooth cheek and dallies with the raven hair, the fair look fairer; and the reckless old gossip chats with a more vicious malevolence. Sometimes we might fancy old Neptune heavily chuckling over his impromptu loves, or incline to steal up treacherously and easy to his marine caverns the laughing children whose garments flutter on the rocks kissed by his satellite waves.

It seems odd, when we consider the thing, to ride four miles after dinner, for the apparent purpose of gazing at each other from carriage windows and over horses' necks. Seen through a spyglass, from a distance, the scene would naturally excite wonderment; but it is, in fact, a mutual inhalation, which, you know, is the last medical fashion; and why is it not just as rational for people to take sea-air together as ices or candies? It is certainly as wholesome a repast, and, to judge by appearances, equally enjoyed. I believe nothing makes human creatures so good-tempered as out-of-door pastimes; the highest ancient philosophy was founded in groves; and, in the presence of nature we grow less boastfuls and more tranquil;—so the diurnal swarming of the visitors and residents at Newport, at this angle of the sea, is not so absurd after all. The return is made charming by picturesque glimpses of the beautiful harbor, whose serene waters give back the rosy glow of sunset; happy children throw pennies to the boys who spin the fast gaiety; shawls are considerably thrown over fair shoulders; the horses are urged to a brisk trot; and, as the various parties alight at hotel, villa and cottage, all exclaim "what a pleasant drive!" and hasten to prepare for "hop," concert or visiting.

It would be difficult, if not impossible, to find in any community on this side of the water, a more gifted, agreeable and benevolent circle of ladies than is included in the permanent society of Newport. Superior female conversation and unexceptionable families of wealth, are the two noticeable social facts—more apparent when the annual tide of fashionable or pleasure-seeking visitors ebbs and leaves the place to its own natural beauty and domestic refinements. There was more wit and intellectual enjoyment at the weekly meeting of the Ladies' Club here last Winter than one encounters in any set of intimates in our large cities; and the active and habitual charities that occupy their leisure evince a truly Christian spirit. One is constantly reminded of the life described by Miss YONGE, in the best of her religious novels; a contented, useful and rational life is achieved by mutual and well-directed effort, devoid alike of ostentation and extravagance. How much a result so uncommon in America, is owing to the absence of the commercial spirit and the ambitious style of living elsewhere so evident, it is difficult to say; but it is certainly a fortunate coincidence which made this old seaport town the nucleus of such an intelligent and conscientious society, dwelling apart from the din of trade and the unwholesome extremes of metropolitan display.

For several months the lady residents of Newport have been heartily engaged in all kinds of handiwork, to furnish materials for a Fair in aid of the building fund of a new church. In the lower part of the town there is a miscellaneous population composed of factory workers, boatmen, and others, in humble circumstances, who are prevented by the distance and the expense from attending churches nearer the centre. The Irish are provided, as they ever are, by the watchful zeal of mother church, with an accessible place of worship; but the poorer class of Protestants have long needed a free chapel in their quarter. It was, therefore, determined to erect a temple, under the auspices of old Trinity parish; several gentlemen of wealth interested themselves in the project, and the Bishop of the diocese made a successful appeal to the original Episcopal congregation; further means were, however, indispensable, and the ladies took the matter up in earnest.

This Fair was opened at the large hall adjacent to the Ocean House, on Tuesday, and closed with an auction of the small residue of disposable articles, the following evening; the sale being conducted by a comical genius, well-known and much honored in all social and sporting circles, who made a truly laughable pell-mell of the occasion; and, as he has often done before, sat the table in a roar. Give a dash of Punkey to the proportions, add the jokes of JOHN KENDRICK, and you have in your mind's eye the person and the method of this delectable auctioneer. So many graceful ladies have never long their presence to such an enterprise; look at them and you will acknowledge the vision cheaply bought, indeed, with the entrance fee. There is a widow the sight of whom makes you forget old Weller's sage cautions in an instant; here's face that would do for a Madonna without uttering a line; now, the bright sallies of one lure you to purchase a bouquet; a pillow of boned turkey; and again, you watch the pencil which writes "Annabel" as it notes the names of subscribers to a raffle; gay-tinted heads and [illegible] and pleasantries scatter rival bons-mots; [illegible] their slender wands; dolls and baby-linen attract bewildered children; [illegible] smoking case tempt guilty old bachelors; and such an gamut of good work is positively dissecting. Examine those beautiful paper weights, fly, ape and statue from the enchanting teacher, painter in oil with Norman accompanying quaint group of rocks, an inlay with a soul here, the [illegible] for the old mill, etc. That mellow, expressive [illegible] picture of "the mother and child," so alive with the sentiment of infancy and maternity, is the work of the skillful [illegible] STRAUB; this effective head is from the pencil of Miss STUART, daughter of the great painter; those beautiful drawings were executed by the young ladies whose unusual ability was never dreamed of by half their acquaintance; yonder crowd are inspecting a book illuminated in the style of the ancient missals—a few gems of poetry elaborately printed in German text, and around it the most artistic designs in gold and colors—truly a marvel of taste, ingenuity and perseverance, and all the work of one young lady. We will take a share in that raffle—the two hundred and sixteenth! In the evening of each day, the Gentlemen have enlivened the scene by their music, and a perfect tide of fashion, beauty, belles and beaux have passed round the gay counters. It was like a morning in the Palais Royal or Rue Vivienne, and something beside cash was lost across the counter. STERNE would have bought gloves, if the fair traders had tried them on, all day; and even satiric THACKERAY given the spectacle a gentler name than "Vanity Fair." Its success, financially speaking, has surpassed all expectation; the walls of Emanuel Church will rise as many feet as three thousand dollars will pay for, in consequence of this well arranged enterprise of "the ladies of our hale."

The accomplished correspondent of the Courrier des Etats Unis is, however, mistaken in saying that the idea of church fairs in Newport originated with the Catholics. They were initiated by the Unitarians, whose comparatively slender treasury has been thrice replenished by such an expedient—cordially sustained by the societies at Taunton, Fall River and Providence.

A new installment of representative men, by the association of ideas, suggest quite a variety of public interests. There is President KING, of Columbia College, whose old-fashioned courtesy recalls the palmy days of the New-York American, when CHARLES HOFFMAN wrote letters from the West in its columns, and "Iantha" impassioned poetry, and its editor was, indeed, a gentleman of the Press. The Catholic question and the fate of Italy come home to us at the sight of Dr. AGNELLI, the converted Italian priest, whose imprisonment in the Castle of St. Angelo, and prominence in a famous English trial, are well known. HENRY S. SANFORD and BANCROFT DAVIS, ex-United States Secretaries of Legation at Paris and London, revive the days of the black coat innovation, when it was bravely attempted to Frankinize American diplomacy, and MARCY failed to sustain the republican costume he courageously initiated. Clerical dignity shows an erect and refined Episcopal column in the person of Bishop EASTBURN; and medical literature a faithful advocate in Dr. J. G. ADAMS, of your City; while the silver hair of Mr. BRYANT—exactly the tint that GUIDO loved—is identified with the New-York Gallery of Old Masters in Art, and the young epicures of the Union Club.

CANONICUS.

A FLIGHT FOR FRESH AIR.

The Franconia Mountains—The Flume House—Lake Winnipiseogee—Mountain Air and its Effect—The Man Who Taught Frank Pierce to Dance.

If you are "wilted with Summer heats," and sick from the smell of gas, and have no country seat of your own, nor a father's farm house to flee to, take your carpet bag in your hand and follow the present writer to the Franconia Mountains, where you will be sure of an exhilarating atmosphere and beautiful sights enough to repay you a thousand times for the time and money which their enjoyment costs. You have your choice of three or four different routes, but the better way will be to go by the Fall River boats to Boston, and there take the Boston and Maine Railroad to Dover in New-Hampshire, as in so doing you will pass through the great manufacturing town of Manchester on the Merrimack, and will see besides a good many other of the thriving and renowned villages of Massachusetts and New-Hampshire, among which is Exeter, where WEBSTER and many more of the great men of New-England went to school in their boyhood; you also pass through the ancient town of Andover, where the first Theological Seminary was built in this country, and where the author of Uncle Tom's Cabin now resides. At Dover, the home of JOHN P. HALE, you take the cars on the Cocheco Railroad for the head of Lake Winnipiseogee, where you will find the steamer Dover, a boat of most excellent arrangements, so incredibly clean, and with so obliging and fatherly a captain, that you will bear her in grateful remembrance all the rest of your life. Probably you will not find so great a crowd of ladies and gentlemen on board of her as we did, for it happened to be a gala day on the Lake, the stockholders of the road having arranged to give their wives and daughters a trip across this beautiful sheet of water, on the occasion of their annual meeting, or something of that sort. But the crowd was not so great as to interfere with our enjoyment of the bold and beautiful scenery, which greatly resembles that of the Hudson on the Tappan Sea, nor of a capital dinner, one of the ingredients of which was boiled halibut, and of which a lady who sat near us at the table, partook, because she "presumed it was caught in the Lake." The Lake is thirty miles in length, or at least from the starting point to Centre Harbor, where you land and take stage either for North Conway or the Flume House, passing through Plymouth, one of the prettiest villages we have ever looked upon; and, as you approach it, you look down upon its elegant cottages, neat gardens and luxuriant fields from the wooded heights of a mountain, as though you were looking down upon a toy village. The road from Centre Harbor to this place is over a mountain, which affords many glorious views, and the sweet balsamic air is most exhilarating to the feelings. After leaving Plymouth, the ascent is sometimes steep and sometimes gradual, but the road winds its way through a most charming country and by the side of the rushing Pemigewasset, which you now and then see tumbling over its rocky bed, but always hear as it dashes seaward, leaping over precipices and turning mill-wheels. You reach the Flume House in the Mountains about ten at night, and after a sound night's sleep awake in the morning with a sensation of freshness and vigor, and an elasticity of spirits which are worth a thousand times what the attainment of them has cost you. One of the most remarkable and amusing effects of the mountain air is the disposition to dance, which it gives all who breathe it, whether old or young. On the first night of our arrival at the Flume House, I was so much delighted as surprised to see two old gentlemen, well known to the readers of newspapers by their controversial writings, and the hearty wheeks they have given each other through the press, dancing in the same cotillion with some very sedate looking Quaker ladies from Philadelphia. But the most amusing spectacle of all was the maître de danse; a venerable old gentleman in spectacles, who played on the fiddle and called out the figures in the most astonishing manner. It was a sight not often seen. When I first entered the ladies' parlor in the evening, I saw a white-headed old gentleman, whom I took to be a judge or an ex-Senator, or some other grave personage, playing euchre with a couple of lovely little girls, the daughters of Doctor B—— of Washington, and at the tea-table I was rather shocked to find his venerable old gentleman standing behind my chair, and offering to bring me a cup of tea; but, when I saw the same old gentleman in the evening, with his wooden under his chin, and calling out "ladies change," "balance," "hands across," I recognized all around I and so on, my astonishment was equal to that of Sir Hamech Shackle on discovering the nature of Professor Bumpkin's mastership. On asking who this strange old man of the Mountain might be, I learned that he was the celebrated Professor PUSHER, one of the most dancing masters in New-England, and who had taught FRANK PIERCE to dance.

I had seen enough for one night, and retired a candle and buried off to bed, lest the Old Man of the Mountain, with his bewitching fiddle, should entice me on to the floor to dance a Virginia reel with some of the grave old ladies or fruticosome young girls who were making preparations for a regular break-down.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

Correspondence of the New-York Daily Times.

ST. LOUIS, Wednesday, Aug. 8, 1855.

General HARNEY, with his command, it is understood here, set out for the Sioux country on the 4th inst. There has been so much preparation and so much grave parade about this expedition as if there was to be an invasion of Mexico or Canada. To those who have been upon the Plains, as I have, and know something of the habits of the nomadic tribes, the whole thing is absolutely ludicrous. The Sioux and their allies do not cultivate the earth at all. Their sole reliance is upon the chase. At this season the killing of more buffalo than is absolutely necessary for daily sustenance would be the merest folly, because without salt—which they have not—the meat would be spoiled in one week. It is impossible, therefore, that they can concentrate any considerable number of men at any one point, or at points from which rapid intercommunication could be carried on. And yet General HARNEY, with a force of seven hundred men, complains that this force is inadequate. The bill authorizing the expedition was approved on the 3d of March last, and the apology now offered for entering the Indian country too late in the season to accomplish anything effective, is that the time for making the requisite preparation has been too short. I will venture to say that a mounted force of five hundred men would have fitted out in six weeks more appropriately than General HARNEY has now done. They would not have waited to pick out all of the most dashing horses in the country; nor would they have laid in provisions as if they intended to occupy a desert island. In a trice they would have bought a border rifle, some blankets and coon-skin caps, a few stout chunks of ponies, and have been off now. They would not have encumbered themselves with hundreds of wagons loaded down with provender for horses and provisions for themselves—enough food to carry them to the Buffalo region would have sufficed. The grass upon the plains would have been relied upon to sustain their horses. Once in the country of the grouse, with guns and ammunition, they would have subsisted themselves far better than the Indians with their bows and arrows and their miserable trade guns could. Once in the Sioux country, instead of traversing it in bodies of one hundred each, they would have broken up into parties of thirty and have scoured the country, chastising the Indians wherever they found them. Even in the month of October, the most favorable season for the Indians, they could not have concentrated over five or six hundred men at any one point. Twenty-five good soldiers are enough to whip that number. This I have seen tested. At this season, they cannot provision one hundred men for ten days anywhere.

The late rupture between the Sioux and the Omahas was not occasioned by any specific cause. The feud between the tribes is hereditary. The rupture is a perpetual one—the opportunity to take an advantage accidentally presented itself. I do not apprehend that the difficulty will be aggravated now much more than usual. The Omahas are a very weak tribe. The Sioux, numbering in all eighteen distinct bands and seven or eight thousand fighting men, are the most powerful upon the plains. If they possessed the means of subsisting their warriors and concentrating them, they would be troublesome customers to Uncle Sam himself.

The attempt to sell the Ohio and Mississippi railroad has kept the public mind intensely excited here for some weeks. The general tone of opinion and current of feeling are undoubtedly against Messrs. PAGE & BACON, or rather against the latter, as he has been the sole manager in the affair. The sale has been enjoined by the Court of Common Pleas. Upon the question of perpetuating this injunction, the whole truth may possibly be elicited. In the meantime I incline to think the larger portion of the community, including the larger portion of its wealth and intelligence, estimate the conduct of Mr. BACON about as they do that of your mammoth speculator, Mr. SCHUYLER.

Yours, &c., D.

Sydney Smith and His American Friends.

The following letters from the late Dr. WAINWRIGHT and Bishop DOANE, concerning the supposed arrival of SYDNEY SMITH in this country, are published in the Life of SMITH, just issued by the HARPERS. They are sufficiently curious to be interesting:

NEW-YORK, July 12, 1844.

REV. AND DEAR SIR—Upon the recent arrival of the Great Western, in the list of passengers published was SYDNEY SMITH. The next morning the newspapers trumpeted throughout the land that the founder of the Edinburg Review, "the distinguished Prebendary of St. Paul's," "the man of a thousand of the happiest sayings of the age," and above all, "the scourge of repudiating Pennsylvania," had actually arrived in this remote hemisphere! What was to be done? Should he be tarred and feathered or tyneched? Quite the contrary! He was to be fêted, rejoiced in, and even Pennsylvania was to meet him with cordial salutations. A hundred dinners were arranged at the moment and the guests selected. When, lo! he who had caused this great excitement turned out to be some humble New-York trader of whom nobody had ever heard before! Now, he might have signed himself S. SMITH and all would have been well; it would have passed for SAMUEL, SIMEON or SHMARJAHUT.

But in an evil hour he had the vanity or presumption to write in full, and hence have come upon us disappointments without end. As a proper reparation we must insist upon his applying to the Legislature to have an agnomen with which he has no business changed.

Among the disappointed were numbers of my congregation, who, seeing a very dignified and clerical-looking stranger in my pew at St. John's, the day after the Western arrived, jumped at the conclusion and stared a worthy ecclesiastic almost out of countenance as he went out of church; and his only consolation is that he came nearer to passing for a wit than he ever did before or ever will again. But the most disappointed person was your old schoolmate, and my excellent friend MOORE, who, being confined to his house, and hearing the Sunday sermon from his family, was momentarily expecting, for three hours after service, to take his Winchester friend by the hand.

Now would it be possible for you to give us the only solace for these disappointments? The ships and steamers are admirable—the passage in Summer and Autumn by no means arduous—the welcoming awaiting you the heartiest possible, and the country and people—you will judge of them when you come! In New-York you will find a home prepared for my honored friend in other places I send you a letter which I received from the Bishop of New-Jersey from his beautiful place, Riverside.

Most truly your affectionate friend and servant,

J. M. WAINWRIGHT.

From the Bishop of New-Jersey.

RIVERSIDE, New-Jersey, July 8, 1844.

MY DEAR WAINWRIGHT—I decline accepting a dinner to offer him the hospitality of Riverside. You have been promising me a visit. I propose to see that you invite him to come on with you on Monday or Tuesday of next week, as may be most agreeable to you. I mean that time of my proposed visit to Niagara, Toronto, &c., on the following week. Let me hear from you as soon as convenient. I observe that your Chamber has sailed for Europe; we follow her with our best wishes.

With best love to all yours, ever your affectionate brother,

G. W. DOANE.

NOTICES OF NEW BOOKS.

THE PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE SEA, BY MATHEW F. MAURY, LL.D., Lieutenant United States Navy. [illegible] New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS. 1855. 12mo., pp. [illegible]

Lieutenant MAURY is undoubtedly entitled to the proud title of Public Benefactor. He has brought science home to the comfortable home of every one. He has done wonders in persuading mariners to assist, by their practical observations, in the great task of reducing the dangers of navigation, by literally showing what is the best track for vessels to take, at various seasons, over the vast expanse of that world of waters surrounding the earth which we inhabit. To him is the marine of the whole world indebted for "The Wind and Current Charts," on which are traced the records of many and many a voyage, so that one KNOWS when to expect at different periods of the year, in all latitudes and under almost every imaginable circumstance. In the winds of heaven, the currents of ocean, the variations of the compass, and the temperature of the water, are not accidental, but are governed by fixed laws, which "he who runs may read." The great Creator has left nothing to chance. The lights of experience have developed and proved that great truth—already proclaimed by religion and by reason. It is by Lieutenant MAURY, who is evidently influenced by both, that the youngest ship-master who sails, having the Wind and Current Charts before him, (proved by the experience of thousands who have traversed the same paths,) is placed upon a level with the oldest mariners. Lieut. MAURY truly says of such a chart, "They took it to the sea, they tried it, and to their surprise and delight they found that, with the knowledge to afforded, the remote quarters of the globe were brought closer together, in some instances, by many days' sail. The passage hence to the equator was shortened ten days. Before the commencement of this undertaking, the average passage to California was 183 days; but with these charts for their guide, navigators have reduced that average, and brought it down to 123 days." The outward voyage from England to Australia has been shortened from an average of 124 to 97 days.

The construction of these charts naturally led to a consideration of the physical geography of the sea. A thousand American shipmasters, practical and intelligent men, have sided and are siding in the collection of facts bearing on the subject. The maritime States all over the civilized world are siding, also—for this knowledge is for the general good of all mankind. All nations are agreeing to cooperate in this great pursuit. To diminish not only the length of voyages, but to lessen the dangers of the sea, is indeed a noble and elevating pursuit—and MAURY is the parent of this vast and practicable design.

The volume before us includes "a philosophical account of the winds and currents of the sea; of the circulation of the atmosphere and ocean; of the temperature and depth of the sea; of the wisdom that are hidden in its depths; and of the phenomena that display themselves at its surface. In short, I shall treat of the economy of the sea and its adaptations—of its salts, its waters, its climates, and its inhabitants, and of whatever there may be of general interest in its commercial uses or industrial pursuits, for all such things pertain to its Physical Geography."

The object of this little book, moreover, is to show the present state, and, from time to time, the progress of this new and beautiful system of research, as well as of this interesting department of science; and the aim of the author is to present the gleanings from this new field in a manner that may be interesting and instructive to all, whether old or young, sailors or others, who desire a closer look into "the wonders of the great deep," or a better knowledge as to its winds, its adaptations, or its Physical Geography."

The different chapters treat of the following subjects in succession: The Gulf Stream—Influence of the Gulf Stream upon Climates—the Atmosphere—Red Fogs and Sea Dust—the probable relation between Magnetism and the Circulation of the Atmosphere—Currents of the Sea—the open Sea in the Arctic Ocean—the Salts of the Sea—Equatorial Closed-ring—the Geological Agency of the Winds—the Depths of the Ocean—the Basin of the Atlantic—the Winds—the Climates of the Ocean—the Drift of the Sea—Storms—Routes, &c. It is illustrated with twelve charts, maps, and plans.

Though not yet three months published, a second and much enlarged edition has been called for. In Europe, the sale has been considerable, and we state it as a fact of which this country has every right to be proud, that the result determination to carry a line of telegraphic communication between Europe and America was not arrived at until the depth of the Atlantic had been ascertained by researches made under Lieut. MAURY's suggestions and instructions, and communicated to the world by him. We have a great man among us, and he annihilates both time and space. The book before us is full of interest, and is written with remarkable clearness. We do not, because we need not, impress its value upon the public. But we point to it, with satisfaction, as the most valuable practical and scientific work brought before the world for years.

This is essentially an English book. ROBERT NEWTON was English;—his biographer, who has been President of the Methodist Conference of Great Britain, is English;—his portrait, by an English painter, is put upon steel by an English engraver;—the paper, printing, everything save the title page and covers, is English also.

ROBERT NEWTON may be considered as the most useful, perhaps the most brilliant and certainly the most indefatigable, of all the Methodist preachers in England since the time of WESLEY. He was a preacher before the age of nineteen, and it pleased God to permit him to be active in the ministry for a period of nearly fifty-four years. Almost from the very first, his sermons were popular, and for many reasons. He was a pious man, without being in the slightest degree Phariseical. He had accustomed himself to give the plainest and most practical expositions of Holy Writ. He had a thorough acquaintance with the Word of God. He possessed a strong, natural eloquence which the aged and the young, the educated and the untaught, the high and the lowly could not help being moved by. His stature was lofty, his features comely, his expression thoroughly hearty and honest, his action appropriate and unencumbered, his voice as fine, perhaps, as ever sounded from the pulpit. He was a man digito monstrari. In all the relations of life ROBERT NEWTON acquitted himself like a Christian. He conciliated, he won, he persuaded, he instructed, and, by the good help of God, he converted.

Commencing public life so early as he did, ROBERT NEWTON had no claim to be considered what is called a learned man. He knew no language save that of his native land, but he was fully master of that. Who that ever heard him but was struck with his fine Saxon English? But, though he had not wasted the midnight oil over the contents of libraries, one book he constantly studied. The Bible was his constant companion, and he knew every line of it.

For half a century, during which his labors were not interrupted by bodily illness, ROBERT NEWTON's labors were dedicated to the advancement of the Wesleyan Ministry and to the interests of Wesleyan places of worship. Whether on the platform or in the pulpit, his voice was raised for them. He traveled for these purposes, and spoke as 8,000 miles a year, and engaged during fifty years, "in spite of the fatigue that every thinking man will appreciate, to preach twice every week, on an average." It is probable that he thus addressed more sinners for religious subjects than any other man. He served twelve, and all this time [illegible] chapel. Nineteen times he was Secretary, and four times President of the British Conference.

In 1846, Rev. ROBERT NEWTON visited the United States as representative of that Conference, and neither the man nor his preaching can soon be forgotten here. He was well received at the Conference in Baltimore—(how astonished, as a Wesleyan, must he have been at meeting six Methodist Bishops)—and wherever he went gave satisfaction and did good.

In 1852, having passed the allotted period of "threescore and ten years," he retired from the more active work of the ministry; [illegible] mined, soon after, to provide himself and Dr. BUNTING with an annuity of £200 each. He did not enjoy it long, having died in April, 1854, in the 74th year of his age, and the fifth of his ministry.

There was much that was lovable about ROBERT NEWTON. He was good-tempered, humble-minded and unambitious,—differing much, in these respects, from JABEZ BUNTING, his friend and contemporary, who was so arbitrary as to have obtained the subsequent, out of as well as in the Methodist connection, of "Bishop," and sometimes "Pope" BUNTING. In every respect, ROBERT NEWTON was a man who may be held up as an example to all ministers of the gospel. He had more personal friends, perhaps than any man in the British dominions. He literally devoted his talents, his life, to the service of religion.

It is well that a faithful biography of this man should be given to the world. It has been written by Mr. JACKSON, Ex-President of the Conference, and well written, we are glad to report. The only blot on the performance is, that while treating of the contemporaries, Dr. W. (WARREN, of Manchester, whose sermons The Throne of Power and the Methodist body, he speaks as a partisan and uses very unmeasured language. For example, he speaks of the Doctor's [illegible] himself "with a body of desperate men" and of his acting on principles of "lawless aggression." He speaks of a "wicked newspaper" taking WARREN's part. Speaking of the dissensions of 1849, he uses equally hard words. In future editions this should be amended. Upon the whole, the life of NEWTON must be considered a valuable accession to Methodist literature. Not on this the ground, if this record of it induce other laborers in the same field of Christian utility to follow his most excellent example.

A new and handsome octavo edition of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, translated by E. W. LANE, enriched with a hundred engravings by VAN INGEN, well printed and gilty bound, has been issued by LIPPINCOTT, GRAMBO & Co., of Philadelphia. The translation is supplied by one of the very best Oriental scholars now living, and comes with the freshness and ease of an original work. In this volume (from which, also, the well-known stories of Aladdin and Ali Baba have dropped out) we find many tales which are not to be found in the version (translated from the French translation) with which we were familiar in youth. Several of these are at least equal in interest to any of the old ones. We have pursued the book with great pleasure. It is delightful to find in it, that, with what gave us unmixed satisfaction in the days when life was young, and romance was charming, when we used to think of Haroun Alraschid, and Giaour, and Mezeppa, as wandering about the streets of Bagdad of nights, in search of adventures—when we loved to laugh over the seven voyages of Sinbad the Sailor, and to laugh over the imagery of Abou Hassan. In these utilitarian times, it is a comfort to know that the Arabian Nights are as popular with the young as old as they ever were. For our part, we read them once a year, in alternation with the Vicar of Wakefield, Don Quixote, Rasselas, The Talisman, Kenilworth, The Heart of Mid Lothian, and the wicked but pleasant Gil Blas.

LIPPINCOTT, GRAMBO & Co., of Philadelphia, have published, in two handsome octavo volumes, a translation of THIERS' History of the Consulate and the Empire, as far as has yet appeared in France; that is, to July, 1809, when the impolitic and disastrous war in the Peninsula had commenced. We need not say a word in praise of M. THIERS as a historian. He has proved himself laborious, as well as talented, and has unearthed a variety of facts hitherto unrelated, and in many instances kept back, for various causes, from the public. His former position as Prime Minister of France, placed the national archives wholly at his command, and from them he has largely and judiciously drawn a great quantity of information—not the least source of which has been NAPOLEON's own correspondence with official and other personages. THIERS has availed himself, also, of confidential communications from persons who took a leading part in the transactions which he records, and of the family papers of others who have passed away into the land of shadows. Lastly, he has drawn upon all the published memoirs of any importance or interest which touch upon his subject. Part of the translation (by Mr. FORBES CAMPBELL) was executed under THIERS' own surveillance. The remainder has been equally well done by H. W. HERBERT, in this country.

The Island Empire, published by PARRY & MCMILLAN, Philadelphia, is written by the author of Bondelle—whoever that person may be, an Englishman, if we may judge from the dedication and preface. It contains a very interesting account of a tour in the Island of Elba, an account of NAPOLEON's residence there in 1814-'15, and a historical sketch of the place. Everything connected with NAPOLEON is of interest. Already, in a part of the history which he made, The Island of his reign in Elba deserves to be treated in detail, and the reader will have to refer to complaints of the manner in which he is treated here. We learn two facts from the Tour, which are worth relating. One is that Monte Cristo, (the island immortalized in DUMAS' romance,) has lately been purchased by WARNER TAYLOR, an Englishman, who has spent a considerable sum of money in the erection of a house for himself, and cottages for about a hundred emigrants, who have been induced to follow him." Monte Cristo is situated near Elba, to which it was legally attached in 1802. The other circumstance is that Lord DRAKE's friend, the Marquise de Solesy, of Paris, (formerly the Countess GUICCIOLI,) is rightful possessor of the mines in Calamita, which produce the best iron in Elba.

The Jealous Wife, a Novel, by Miss PARSONS, (which is on the eve of publication by W. P. FETRIDGE, of New-York and Boston,) is a production of a very peculiar character. The heroine, a beautiful woman of six-and-twenty, sacrifices wealth, station, and her father's love, in order to marry the man of her choice, who is six years her junior, and, from first to last, devotedly attached to her. Soon after marriage, the lady becomes jealous, and without a cause. The end is—the wreck of wedded love, a separation, and the wife's return to her father's princely establishment. We suspect, from the abruptness and manner of the conclusion, that Miss PARSONS intends writing a sequel, in which man and wife shall be reunited. Literally based upon one idea, this romance of real life is written with much artistical skill, and the interest never flags. There is a capital moral in this book, which we trust that young married people will apply to themselves.

Lights and Shadows of English Life, in three volumes, is written by a lady, and republished by LIPPINCOTT, GRAMBO & Co., Philadelphia. It is readable enough, without displaying any marked talent, and among other points, illustrates the fallacious idea that the course of true love never yet ran smooth.

RELEASING CONTRACTORS.

Pay of the Census Marshals.

The Board of Supervisors, at a late meeting, after a prolonged discussion, made disposition of most of the bills of the Census Marshals. The Committee, to whom were referred the bills in the report, expressed great embarrassment, from the condemning of the bills rendered, to settle upon a satisfactory basis upon which to audit the accounts. In a report from the whole number (over 150) they could find only about fifty that were any where near reasonable on their face, and even many of these they had to reduce to a figure more consonant, as they alleged, with the stipulations of the statute regulating the case. The bills reported upon, however, ordered to be paid. Yesterday the Committee met to consider the residue of the bills. One bill charged $40 "for an interpreter." Finally confessed that his son acted as interpreter. To a similar charge of $40 for copying he acknowledged indebtedness to the same filial aid. The Committee make the report to the Board of Supervisors who meet this afternoon.

Stick Them to their Contracts.

There is not a greater humbug than to offer the City work to the lowest bidder—taking the bids with all solemnity, and formally awarding them—and then, before the first year is up, resolving to release the contractors, on the ground that the bargain was a ruinously bad one to the contractor. It is the perfection of humbug—it makes intelligent men laugh, though in the very stomach of despair, to hear it talked of as anything else than the boldest humbug, and a most transparent method of putting jobs into the hands of partisan friends. If the contractors will be ruined if they fulfill their contracts, pass 'round the hat, and let us do what we can to relieve them. Let us always be charitable, as we open soup-houses in Winter, and drop a penny into a beggar's palm in freezing weather, but no more of this voting money into the pockets of favorites under false pretences. Away with such shallow methods of cheating the public. Stick men to their contracts, or drop the curtain forever on the farce of giving contracts to lowest bidders. The Commissioners were trying their hand at the old game last night.

Special Committee on Charge of Corruption against Alderman Moore.

The Special Committee of the Board of Aldermen appointed to investigate into the charge of corruption against Alderman MOORE, preferred by Alderman HOFFMIRE, met yesterday afternoon at the City Hall. Present, Aldermen ELY, (Chairman,) WAKEMAN, and HERRICK. Owing to absence out of town of Alderman HOFFMIRE, the Committee did not enter upon the investigation. Ex-Recorder WOODS was in attendance.

☞ The Law Committee's Report in the Board of Aldermen—on Mayor WOOD's refusal to tell who the guardians of the City are—is to be considered in the Board this evening. The Board should compel itself sufficiently to follow this matter up until its rights and powers are fairly understood.

☞ The Committee on Railroads (Alderman WESTON, Chairman,) of the Board of Aldermen will meet at No. 8 City Hall, on Friday next, at 3 P. M., to hear parties interested in subjects before their consideration.

CITY CHAMBERLAIN.

A communication was received from the Mayor announcing the nomination for Chamberlain of the City Robert Kelly, in place of Francis W. Edmonds, resigned. The nomination was confirmed.

SIDEWALKS MAINTAINED FROM PIERS BEING OUT OF REPAIR.

A communication was received from the Counsel to the Corporation, in response to a resolution of the Board requesting his opinion whether the City is liable for damages sustained in consequence of piers being out of repair, when said piers are under lease. A case, it is stated, involving the identical question the Board seek information upon, was tried before the Marine Court in February last, and judgment was rendered against the City. Upon an appeal, however, taken to the Court of Common Pleas, and fully argued before the Judges of that Court, the decision has not yet been rendered. In his opinion the decision of the Marine Court would be reversed. The Piers of the City are the private property of the Corporation, as distinguished from the public property in the streets and highways. In regard to the latter owning them as Trustees for the public use, they could not lease or dispose of them and are bound to keep them in repair. In regard to Piers, they hold them not only as private property, from which they derive income and profit, but are bound by the amended Charter of 1853 to lease them at Public Auction to the highest bidder. During the time they remain in their possession and under their control they are liable for damages for injuries arising from want of repair. But when they pass from their possession, those into whose possession they pass are liable for damages sustained while in their possession. In conclusion he adds, that the decision of the Court of Common Pleas in the case he will transmit to the Board as soon as rendered. Ordered on file.

THE REYNOLDS CONTRACT.

The President announced as the Special Committee, on the communication from the Comptroller and memorial of W. E. REYNOLDS, previously submitted to the Board, in relation to his offal contract, Aldermen STEERS, BRIGGS and DRAKE.

PAY OF THE CENSUS MARSHALS.

The communication of the Comptroller from the Board of Councilmen, recommending an appropriation of $15,000, with an ordinance providing for its due appropriation, to defray the expenses incurred in taking the census of 1855, was received and concurrence voted.

THE MAYOR AND POLICE APPOINTMENTS.

The Report of the Committee on Law Department on the message of His Honor the Mayor, relative to the resolution calling for information as to the number of Policemen appointed since the 1st of January last, was, on motion, taken from the table and its adoption moved by Alderman WAKEMAN.

Alderman KELLY spoke against acting upon the Report in the absence from the Board of so many members adverse to the views expressed in the Report. He moved to delay the document and make it the special order for Wednesday evening. Carried.

THE IRON PAVEMENT.

The report of the Committee on Streets, concurring with the Board of Councilmen, to have Maiden-lane and Cortlandt-street paved with the iron pavement, was taken from the table. After a long and desultory discussion, preferring of discussions on the same subject, it was finally voted to refer the report back to the Committee.

THIRD DISTRICT POLICE COURT.

An invitation was accepted to visit the Third District Police Court, Essex Market, to see the communication for dispensation of justice at this Court.

Adjourned to this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Board of Councilmen.

Present—Mr. Brady, President, pro tem, in the Chair.

A quorum being present, the minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

PETITIONS REFERRED.

RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

To have sidewalk relaid in Twenty-second-street. To pave Thirty-sixth-street, between Second and Third avenues. To compel the Hoboken Ferry to run their boats until 9 o'clock P. M.

COMMUNICATION ADOPTED.

From the Comptroller, recommending an appropriation of $15,000 to pay Census Marshals for 1855.

RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

To have sidewalks in Twenty-second-street flagged and redagged. That Thirty-sixth-street, between Second and Third avenues, be paved. That the Committee on Lamps and Gas report in regard to the application by the Metropolitan Gas Company to lay mains in the City. In relation to the extension of the sewer in Fifty-sixth-street.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED.

That the County Clerk furnish the Committee appointed to redistrict the City for the election of the City, with the aggregate of each election district of every Ward of the City.

SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY.

On motion, the Board took up the consideration of the report of the Committee on Cleaning Streets, in relation to the petition of Christian Zeigler, P. Coyle and John Kelly, the contractors for cleaning Seventh, Eleventh, Thirteenth, Seventeenth, Second, Fourth, Sixth, Twentieth, and Twenty-second Wards, to have the contracts canceled and be relieved from their obligations. The Committee reported in favor of canceling the contracts because the contractors undertook to do the work below a compensation for the amount of labor, and because the continuation of the contracts is only a continuation of the evil from which the City is desirous to be relieved.

It was suggested by one of the members from the rural districts, that the proper course would be to refer the whole matter to the Comptroller or the Corporation Attorney for adjustment. After some discussion, the following amendment was adopted by a vote of 28 ayes, 1 nay, viz.: That the Comptroller be authorized, empowered and directed to settle the claims of all the contractors for cleaning streets. The Board then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MASON in the chair, and took up the regular calendar and ordered a number of reports and resolutions to a third reading, rose and reported progress. The report was accepted. The Board then adjourned to Wednesday.

The New Chamberlain and his Successor.

Mr. EDMONDS, late Chamberlain of the City, has resigned, and his resignation has been accepted by the Mayor, with a complimentary recognition of Mr. EDMONDS' fidelity and accuracy as a public officer.

ROBERT KELLY, Esq., was appointed Mr. EDMONDS' successor, and has accepted the office. He was sworn into office yesterday. As Mr. KELLY is one of the largest stockholders of the Mechanics' Bank, that institution will probably continue to be the depository of the City funds:

LETTER FROM F. W. EDMONDS TO THE MAYOR.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 13, 1855.

DEAR SIR: It being customary for the Chamberlain to be an officer of some one of our City Banks, and having resigned the office I held in the Mechanics' Bank, I deem it proper to tender my resignation as City Chamberlain from this date.

My accounts will be found to correspond exactly with the accounts in the Comptroller's Department, and to that officer I beg to refer you for a confirmation of their correctness and accuracy.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. W. EDMONDS.

To Hon. FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

REPLY OF THE MAYOR.

MAYOR'S OFFICE, New-York, Aug. 14, 1855.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of 13th inst., tendering your resignation of the office of City Chamberlain, and stating that your accounts will be found correct, is received.

In accepting this resignation, I beg to assure you that in your connection with the City finances nothing has transpired to impair the confidence which was placed in you at the time of your appointment.

Your accounts have been properly kept, and every dollar entrusted to your custody has been faithfully accounted for.

But as it is not only customary, but almost indispensable, that this office should be filled by a person connected with some one of the large moneyed institutions of this City, I readily appreciate your motive for resigning when no longer in that position.

With the kindest feelings towards you personally and best wishes for your future prosperity, I am

Very truly yours,

FERNANDO WOOD, Mayor.

To F. W. EDMONDS, Esq., New-York.

The Tenth Ward K. N.'s—More Swearing—Extra Efforts to Remember our Reporter's Address—Brother Huested still on Trial.

On Saturday last, a large company of visitors from other wards who had been attracted by the reports in the NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES, assembled in Council with the Tenth Ward K. N.'s and the opening promised a "lively time" for the "Order." For some unaccountable reason, however, no candidates for membership were forthcoming, and to prevent any bad impression, three old brothers were re-initiated. It seems that the brothers are so accustomed to "oaths," that a practice has grown up among them of re-swearing the brothers every few months. It has become a periodical operation, though no definite time is fixed for it. Whenever the "majority" will it, and nothing else is on hand, they busy themselves with swearing "fidelity to America."

After this process, Brother WAINWRIGHT announced that, as Chairman of the Committee on Brother HUESTED, he had something of consequence to announce to the Tenth Ward Lodge exclusively; and as it ought not to be known to any one else, he moved that all visitors be requested to withdraw. This motion was seconded by the Oracle, which ensured its prompt adoption, and Brother BROOKS, with his usual blandness, assured the visitors that the movement, he believed, was dictated by the most profound wisdom, as the mover and the seconder were both running over with feeling for the Brotherhood, and though Council No. 5 regretted to show her visitors to the door on this occasion, he hoped "it was for the good of the Order."

The visitors, including Brother FARRINGTON, the Grand Secretary, then withdrew. Brother F. claimed a right, as State Officer, to remain; but he was overruled and ejected with the rest. Whereupon Brother WAINWRIGHT proceeded with his announcement—the purport of which was that the Committee had the most convincing proof of the guilt of Brother HUESTED; but in order to make it perfectly sure, he proposed that the names of all brothers be taken down, and that they be sworn at the next meeting whether they were guilty of giving the next report to the NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES! This anomalous proposition was amended by a proposal to swear them all immediately. It was strange, considering the readiness of the brothers to make oaths, and to take oaths, and who really seem to enjoy their swearing unusually, that this motion could not pass without discussion. One bold opponent said that a traitor ought not to be believed any how. That if a man would carry secrets to the NEW-YORK DAILY TIMES, he would climb a stack of Bibles sixty feet high, or even as high as "my plans for the New City Hall," and swear that he was innocent.

Notwithstanding this argument, the motion prevailed to swear all around instanter, as DANIEL WEBSTER says in his letter to Rev. SIDNEY SMITH. After some little delay in arranging its points so as to avoid all quibble, an oath was drawn up by Brother B——r, or the Oracle, (but our reporter did not learn which,) and the swearing commenced. Our reporter did not wish to do so great injustice to himself as to swear he was not doing his regular duty, and therefore withdrew. He learned, however, that the matter passed off without such interruption, and that Brother S——r made himself useful in reporting some conversation he had heard outside. We take occasion to return thanks for several communications purporting to give a consecutive account of the entire meeting; but as we rely exclusively upon our reporter, we can only extract from such as give us a name in a voucher.

As soon as the K. N.'s put their candidates in nomination, we shall give the entire list.

P. S.—Our reporter has inquired into the matter about which Brother WILLIAMS called upon us, and learns from the Secretary that Brother CONNEL is the man on the Huested Committee, instead of Brother WILLIAMS.

A Visit to the Gipsies.

Having heard that the Gipsies were around, somewhere in the woods about Hoboken, on Tuesday morning we endeavored to ascertain their precise locality, that we might pay these interesting strangers a visit.

At the Ferry we ascertained that a large party of men, women, and children, had passed that way a few days previously, and that the women had been seen in Hoboken very recently. From their appearance it was concluded they were veritable Gipsies.

Following the directions given us by several German residents, who did not seem half to relish the proximity of their new neighbors, we found their encampment by the wayside on the summit of the hill, about three miles west of the ferry. They had chosen a situation for their first resting place on American soil, where, at least, they had the advantages of a glorious prospect over one Empire City, down the bay and up the Hudson. We envied them the quiet, cool and refreshing rest they must enjoy under the star-lit heaven these hot August nights, when to the tired and jaded inhabitant of a foul, crowded and noisy city it is a positive misery to go bed—not to sleep, but to toss restlessly until the morning.

The women were away or invisible. Five or six ragamuffin urchins peeped curiously at us—they were precisely such as may be seen—indeed, pitely by thousands in our streets. There was certainly nothing characteristic of the Gipsey physiognomy about the children. They were dirty and ragged, but looked well fed and happy enough.

We saw only two men. One had some tinker's tools about him, and was sitting on the ground hammering a bit of tin-plate. Near him was an elegant brass (not copper) kettle of British manufacture. His hammering was evidently only a feint—a sort of make believe. We soon got into conversation with him.

Of course not the slightest reliance ought to be placed on the recitals of persons who naturally suppose every inquisitive stranger an enemy. He said that they arrived only the other day in the Neptune from Liverpool, that he hoped they would do better here than in England; his accent was that of a man bred in the lowest purlieus of the British metropolis, and his appearance of manner might have classed him as one of those men accustomed to travel with some wild beast menagerie or wax-work exhibition. A few words that he uttered led us to think Bristol was his native place, but he was evidently on the qui vive as to any more curious inquiries. His companion spoke English somewhat imperfectly, or with a half Jewish, half German accent. He wanted much to know "if there were no fields in America, no hedges;" it seemed to him all interminable wood.

The women we have not seen. They are described to us more in accordance with the genuine gipsy contour, and are said to possess considerable personal attraction. The people of Hoboken, having a most sacred veneration for their hen-roosts are very impatient of their stay, and we understand the police have already told them to "move on." The real race of Gipsies is becoming very scarce in England—the few herds that remain are generally well provided and even wealthy; their physiognomy is also most unmistakable. Our visitors are evidently poor and miserable enough; similar parties may be found encamping in various parts of the old country, some of whom are known as "Irish Gipsies." These people evidently are not the Irish Gipsies, yet they resemble many of the wandering hordes incorrectly styled "gipsies."

Extensive Arrest of Counterfeiters.

For nine days past Officers MOORE, ROSS and UNDERHILL, of the Second District Police Court, have been actively and incessantly engaged in watching the operations of a gang of "smashers," who were making a fine business by uttering counterfeits of the $5 bank issue of the Ocean Bank of this City, and so secretly were their endeavors to ferret out the operators carried on that, one by one, they have succeeded in arresting thirteen of these wholesale swindlers, all of whom are well known to the police as old offenders.

Yesterday, James Ferguson, Samuel Robinson, Philip Hawes, William Barker, Pete Barker, Peter Smith alias One-Eyed Pete, Anne Sheppard alias Waters, Mary Beamer alias Mary Moore alias Mary Stone, and Henry Dennis, a colored individual, were brought up before Justice PEARCE, of the Second District Police Court, charged with uttering the said counterfeits—forgeries upon the Ocean Bank of New-York, of the denomination of five dollars. The parties were all held for examination.

There is but little doubt but that each of these parties will at length find their efforts to secure State lodgings successful, inasmuch as the officers have been extremely careful to secure in each case the attempted utterance of two bills of the fraudulent issue.

It is very desirable that the public, upon reading this notice, should call at the office to examine, in the presence of the authorities and these prisoners, any doubtful $5 notes of the Ocean Bank they may happen to have in their possession. The notes are all new, and are excellently well executed. Even the Banks of the City have taken them, and it is to be feared that there are at least several thousands of them, (at least five thousand,) in circulation.

The police are naturally anxious that parties who must have received a portion of these notes, should not fail to come and identify these people, in order still more completely to insure their conviction.

Of the parties under arrest, PETER SMITH, or as he is more familiarly known, "One-Eyed Pete," was arrested by the same Officer MOORE about 18 months since, for altering the clever forgeries on the Cranston Bank of Rhode Island.

MARY STONE, with the aliases, is a near relation of the celebrated HONORAH SHEPPARD. She commenced her experiences with the police in 1843, since which time she has had abundant opportunities to cultivate their acquaintance.

ANNE SHEPPARD is also a well known customer. She is a sister-in-law of the same HONORAH SHEPPARD, and she has been repeatedly arrested on a like charge.

John Street M. E. Church.

There will be a meeting of the members and congregation of the above Church, in the Green-street M. E. Church, on Thursday evening, on which occasion a full history of the Church from its commencement to the present time, will be given, including the existing difficulties in the Church, and many interesting facts connected with this time-honored sanctuary, and cradle of Methodism. An advertisement in another column gives fuller particulars.

Is There Such a School?

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

Inquiries having been made of us respecting the "Union Industrial School, corner of Eighth-avenue and Twenty-ninth-street, Lamartine Hall, WM. B. MADGETTS, Superintendent," we would say that after the most careful inquiry in the neighborhood and on the premises, we find no evidence of the existence of such a school, and would caution the public against any pretended agent who may solicit funds in its behalf. The late Stabbing Case at No. 221½ William-street.

JOHN LOVEJOY, to whose sad case we referred in the TIMES of yesterday, died on Monday night last shortly before midnight, at the City Hospital. The facts of this case we have already published, and we now do not more particularly revert to the details of the affray lest we should add anything to prejudice the jury in their adjudication of the case, as it will be presented to them this day at the Coroner's inquest. SEAVER, an Italian, accused of the homicide, is in custody.

Married Bachelors—A Henpecked Husband's Resentiments.

One of our men is in the enjoyment of a very bad state of mind. We were discussing with him last evening, why so large a proportion of married families board in New-York, rather than keep house; for the proportion is indeed much larger than many are prepared to believe: it amounts to perhaps one-third of those who are in comfortable circumstances, and to quite one-half such of the same class as have no children, or only one or two.

Without hesitating a moment, he replied that he thought it was simply because most married folks could not keep from quarreling when alone. Said he, there are few of them who have not tried both. Thus Mr. and Mrs. Smith first go to board after getting married—just for a month or two—until all the appliances for the menage are ready. All goes very well for the first month or so. Then Mrs. Smith begins to get offended at a thousand things. For instance, Mr. Smith pays more attention to Mrs. Brown than he ought. He's too fond of admiring her at all events—that's certain. Mrs. Brown has a much finer dress than Mrs. Smith, or Mrs. Somebodyelse is evidently trying to attract the attention of Mr. Smith; and he, deceitful man! is but too willing. In short, there is sure to be something that Mrs. Smith cannot for the life of her brook, if it was only the little respect she is shown by Mrs. Sausage, the landlady. Of course she must cry, or refuse to eat, or give curtain lectures, or lectures that the whole house will hear. After a little experience in this way, Mr. Smith begins to have some misgivings as to the gentleness and amiability of his "better half;" but he consoles himself with the belief that when they go to housekeeping all will be right. He hurries accordingly.

For a week or so after going, he is delighted with the change, because Mrs. Smith shows that she is. But Mr. Smith errs again. The girl he has provided turns out to be "too saucy," "too dreamy," &c.; while one would suppose that he thinks more of her than of Mrs. Smith—so civilly—almost respectfully—does he address her. How could any lady of proper feeling stand this? Besides, he stops out much oftener and later than he ought. 'Tis nothing good that keeps him, of course; and then again he is far too attentive to lady visitors—not that Mrs. Smith can see that any of them possess a particle of beauty. Mrs. Smith assumes her crying spells: she is the worst treated woman in all the world: Mr. Smith is the most howible of monsters. The girl is discharged: another and another meets the same fate. Mr. Smith is kept busy providing new help; but 'tis good work for him. Mrs. Smith, whom he treats so outrageously, could not of course bring herself to cook for him: nor will she have it done; and so he has either to cook for himself, or go to an eating saloon.

Heart sick of this incessant strife, he determines to give up housekeeping; for the first time in three months Mrs. Smith agrees with him. She is mild as an angel for a week or two after going secondly to board. Then the old difficulties begin gradually to present themselves. But the boarding-house war is rarely so serious as the home war. Even Mrs. Smith is a little shy of the "other boarders," and will not make as much noise as she would "to home." Besides she has others to talk about now, if not to spat with. Still she manages to be more than half the time not on speaking terms with Mr. Smith; but it relieves her wonderfully to tell all the other boarders what an awful tyrant he is, and what innumerable bad things he has said and done to others as well as to herself. There are scores of Mrs. Smiths, said the henpecked husband—several scores, I am quite sure. Be sure, said he, with a most impressive earnestness, that the secret of the boarding system is, that the spouses can endure each other better when surrounded by strangers than when alone; and hence it is that there are so many of those who even advertise for boarders, who couldn't be persuaded to take married ladies.

Whose Religion to be Protected?—Partial Police Favors.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Aug. 13, 1855.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

As a lover of peace and good order, I am admonished by a sense of duty to inquire of you whether the protection of the Police Department in this City is available to our churches, irrespective of denominational distinction? I am prompted to urge this inquiry by a circumstance which has occurred under my own observation very frequently; but on Sunday last I came to the conclusion that fair play demanded that some notice should be taken of the annoyance to which I specially refer.

While listening to a very eloquent discourse last Sunday by Rev. Dr. PENNINGTON, in his Church in Prince-street, the noise outside on the sidewalk was so great that it was impossible to hear the preacher. I noticed also, as I have done frequently, that several of the Trustees of the Church as well as the Sexton have to spend nearly the whole time during service outside, in remonstrating with contemptible wretches who neither know how to use their own, nor how to respect the rights of others. I have noticed also that the Roman Catholic Cathedral, almost adjoining in the same street, is guarded by any number of policemen, not less than five or six during service time. I have no sympathy with such partiality on the part of our police force, and cannot look upon such neglect in any other light than as an official outrage upon the rights and privileges of the Presbyterian brethren of Shiloh Church.

I do not know that Archbishop HUGHES is entitled to any protection as a minister of religion which ought not also to be extended to Rev. Dr. PENNINGTON and his people.

Boston Taste.

The Boston Intelligencer, of Saturday last, pitches into the BARNUM in the most approved "slashing" style. It thinks that "the history of this same BARNUM remains yet to be written, although a catchpenny volume of trash has recently been placed before the people purporting to be a story of his doings," and "opines that when some other hand shall be welded to the task, this life will be shown in a darker and far different phase." The cause of its indignation is BARNUM's proposed Baby Show in Boston. "Parading innocence to fatten humbug," it looks upon as too sacrilegious to be countenanced,—it can appreciate "a Cattle Show at Brighton, but a Baby Show at Music Hall" rather staggers its ideas of propriety, and it hopes for the credit of the city that "BARNUM and his horde of women and babies will be hooted from Boston, or at least allowed to depart penniless." With that modesty for which Bostonians are so noted it says that "aware of the general intelligence of its citizens he (BARNUM) has overleaped Boston in most of his shows and he has certainly thereby saved himself much rebuke and chagrin." This is all very fine, but how about that "charmed girl of Gilmanton, N. H., and her snake," which drew together so many of the refined and intelligent citizens of Boston, but were obliged to leave New-York without so much as a decisive hoot of recognition?

Private Watchman Drowned.

JAMES MCDERMOTT, of No. 96 Jackson-street, engaged as a private watchman, fell into the water off Pier No. 6 East River. The vessel to which his attention was devoted had drifted a few feet from the shore, and as he was about to step on to the deck, he missed his footing and fell into the water between the schooner and the dock. His body has not yet been recovered.

A Convention of Jews.

The annexed is a copy of a printed circular now being circulated among the Jews of this City:

Rabbinical College of Israel.

TRIBUNAL—Peace with Israel.

In consequence of frequent appeals from Our Core or Sanhedrim, the Rabbis of America of the Israelitish Congregations are respectfully invited to assemble in a conference, to take place the 17th October next, 5616, A. M., in the City of Cleveland, Ohio, to deliberate on the following points:

1. On the Union of American Israelites.
2. On a plan to organize a regular permanent Synod or Sanhedrim of Rabbis.
3. On a plan for religious and substantial education of Hebrew youth.
4. On any other proposition that may be brought forward in the conference.

By order of the Provisory Sanhedrim of American Rabbis, viz.: Rev. Dr. MEKEELES, New-York.
Rev. Dr. WISE, Cincinnati.
Rev. Dr. CZAR, Rabbi of Albany.
Rev. Dr. GUTHEZUNE, Rabbi of Baltimore.
Rev. Dr. ILLOWY, Rabbi of St. Louis.
Rev. Dr. KAUSER, Rabbi of Cleveland.

Water, Water Everywhere—and not a Drop to Drink.

Not a drop of water was to be had on the 4 o'clock Poughkeepsie train, which left here on Saturday evening, with over five hundred passengers. The Conductor, on being appealed to in behalf of some children, who were almost famished, said: "This train does not carry a water boy;" and regretted that it was so. Would it not be a good exchange to swap off the Soap man, (who is very attentive,) for a water boy?

Value of Quarantine.

With a case of Virginia before one, and in the light of the following extract from a Petersburg, (Va.) paper, a definite idea of the value of our Quarantine may be obtained:

EXCELLENT ARRANGEMENT.—It will be seen, says the Norfolk Herald of Saturday, by a notice in our advertising columns, that the Baltimore steamboats are hereafter to come up as far as the Quarantine ground, and are there to be met by the city ferry steamer Princess Anne, which will take off and bring up from them the passengers and light freight to the city, and carry down to them the passengers and mail and light freight for Baltimore. The mails will thus be delivered here at the usual early hour, and the intercourse with Baltimore, in the most essential particulars, be kept up as heretofore.

☞ Under our obituary head will be found mention of the sudden death of PASCUAL DONALDSON yesterday afternoon. Mr. D. was for some years connected with the City press, and was distinguished for strict integrity as a man and much ability as a writer. His numerous friends will be pained to hear of this sad and sudden bereavement. Mr. D. was formerly assistant editor of the National Democrat.

A CHEAP DISINFECTOR.—Prof. NASH, of Amherst College, gives the following formula for making home-made Chloride of Lime:

"Take one barrel of lime and one bushel of salt dissolved in as little water as will dissolve the whole; slack the lime with the water, putting on more water than will dry slack it, so much that it will form a very thick paste; this will not take all the water; put on, therefore, a little of the remainder daily until the lime has taken the whole. The result will be a sort of impure chloride of lime, but a very powerful deodorizer, equally good for all out-door purposes with the article bought at the apothecary's and costing not one-twentieth part as much. This should be kept under a shed or some out-building. It should be kept moist, and it may be applied whenever offensive odors are generated, with the assurance that it will be effective to purify the air, and will add to the value of the manure much more than it costs. It would be well for every farmer to prepare a quantity of this, and have it always on hand."

☞ The mother of DANIEL N. HASKELL, Esq., Editor of the Boston Transcript, died at Newburyport on the 6th inst., aged 81 years. The deceased was one of that old and revered school of ladies who inspired with their teachings and intoned by their example the revolutionary heroes of our land.

Cleanings from the Mayor's Office.

COMPLAINT.

Is made that the blasting of rocks is continued in a manner dangerous to the welfare of citizens, in the vicinity of Thirty-sixth-street, between Madison and Fourth avenues. The number of accidents that have of late occurred from this very cause, should have been sufficient to call the attention of contractors to the necessity of strictly complying with the City ordinance regulating the matter, and it is due to the public that Capt. Speight, to whom this particular call is referred, look well to the condition of the works.

DEFRAUDING IMMIGRANTS.

An affidavit was yesterday received at the Mayor's office from Albany, signed before the Recorder of that city, as follows: "We the undersigned being severally sworn, do say that on the 11th day of August we paid for six first-class tickets to our places of destination, at the office of George T. Stanley, agent for the steamboat Manhattan, and when we arrived in Albany we found that we had been swindled, as he charged us first-class price for emigrant tickets.

PETER GORMAN.
EDWARD McCAN.
PATRICK BEGIN.
JOHN BAGGS.
MONTERVILLE BAGGS.
JOHN BROWN."

The two first were proceeding to Ann Arbor, the last to Springfield, Ill., and the others to Detroit, and the amount alleged to be thus fraudulently obtained of them is about $40. Examination will be had.

The Prohibitory Law.

YESTERDAY.

Arrests and examinations continue to be made in numbers daily varying, but averaging about forty per diem, and considerable of the attention of the various police magistrates is taken up in the disposition of the parties accused. In the examinations but little change of expression is met with—the general effect of the prohibition of the intoxicating liquor, of what kind soever, being the eradication of passing events and circumstances from the memories of the unfortunates—remembrance of the circumstances required by the provisions of the act for the Suppression of Intemperance being rather the exception.

But one new feature was presented during the examinations yesterday, and that was at the Tombs Court where Ellen Jay—that is her proper name, although she chose an incog., with a nominal appendage which would be disgusting and insulting if applied to or by any but a drunken beast—attempted in open Court with all her remaining strength, the person of another intoxicated individual named Frederick Tisdale, whom she felt disposed to annihilate.

The following summary shows the total of arrests made for intoxication during yesterday. Of the number, none paid the ten dollar fine, and but few were discharged, the evidence of the debauch being generally too plainly discernible when before the magistrate.

COURT OF SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Owing to the continued indisposition of Judge Stuart, Hon. Judge Daly, of the Court of Common Pleas, held Court yesterday, when a large number of petty cases, to the number of about fifty, were disposed of. On calling up the case of James Wallace, under the provisions of the "Act for the prevention of intemperance, pauperism and crime," for the sale of domestic liquors, appearance was entered, and argument as to the right to carry the cause to General Sessions and a Jury, was postponed until Tuesday next.

Coroners Investigations.

DROWNED.

Coroner O'DONNELL yesterday held an inquest on the body of an unknown man, who came to his death by drowning. The body was found floating down with the stream by two boys, who procuring a boat recovered the corpse and made it fast to the dock. Verdict, death by drowning. Deceased was apparently of about 35 years of age. He was in height five feet eight inches, of a good build, having dark sandy hair and a goatee of the same color. He wore a sack coat of black alpaca, no vest, black cloth pants, no drawers, fitted boots (sewed), grey woolen socks (ribbed).

Police News.

A COUNTERFEIT SCREED.

Mary McDonnell and Margaret Green were yesterday arrested by policeman McDonnell of the Fourth District, charged with having stolen the sum of $54 from William Douglass of Mystic, Conn. It appears that complainant was met at the corner of Chatham and Oliver streets by the first named prisoner, by whom he was induced to visit a house of prostitution, where, during his stay, he was robbed of the sum named, the money being in bank bills of the Mystic Bank, of Conn. This arrest came about after a novel mode. The girl in question gave the money to the male keeping of her companion, who, upon being ready to refund it when requested so to do, it proved to be counterfeit, when the judgment of the bills in the hands of Geo. Ditchett, who held it until he made inquiry into the facts, and thus became acquainted with the main merits of the case. Prisoners were taken before Mr. Justice Connolly and through some technicalities advanced by the counsel who undertook the case, they were released. They were latterly rearrested by Alderman Baird, and held for examination.

Sudden Death.

Mr. JOHN REID, Sen., an old and respected resident of Brooklyn died on Monday night, after a short illness, from a bilious attack. He was 66 years of age.

Sent to the Penitentiary.

PATRICK COYLE, convicted for committing a brutal assault upon DAVID HEALY, was yesterday sentenced by Justice BOARDMAN, in Brooklyn, to six months' imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

Death by Lightning.

From the Beloit (Wis.) Journal.

For the following facts we are indebted to Dr. STRONG, of this village, who was summoned to examine the body of the deceased:

On Saturday morning, Aug. 4, a man by the name of T. J. SHEPPARD, residing on the Madison road, three and a half miles from Beloit, started for his wheat field between the hours of 6 and 7 to see to his grain, which was partly down, and told his family he should go from there in search of a lost cow. About 7 o'clock there was a shock of lightning felt over the vicinity, was thought of it more than that it struck in the vicinity.

His disappearance excited no alarm in the minds of his family until early dark, when they commenced with their neighbors, and search was made. He was found lying on his face, where, to all appearance, he had fallen, with his hat and clothes on the front part of his body torn to shreds, and his boots were both torn to pieces, and one entirely removed from the foot. There were no marks of injury upon his person, save some slight abrasions of the skin. A jury of inquest was summoned, who returned a verdict of "Came to his death by a visitation of God." He was a man about 50 years of age, universally respected, and leaves a small family.

Constitutionality Doubt.

From the Albany Knickerbocker.

PAT NELLIGAN has devoted himself lately to the mysteries connected with the Prohibitory Law, and with such success that the Magistrates find that he is becoming a difficult customer to manage. PAT was arrested on Saturday night, for getting drunk and making a nuisance of himself. On being brought before Justice PARSONS, yesterday morning, he admitted the "drunk," but threw himself on his constitutional rights. He took out the decision of Recorder SMITH of New-York, and showed to the Magistrate that to "make out a case," the witnesses must show that such drunkenness was exhibited in "the public streets or house of the city." Now, as he got drunk in a blacksmith shop and he remained there till he was dragged out by the Police, he insisted that his conduct was constitutional and parliamentary. The Justice took a similar view of the matter and gave NELLIGAN his discharge.

Fatal Accident.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the 13th says—"Our readers will recollect that a few weeks since, several lives were lost by the falling of the brick walls on URBAN'S Safe Factory, on Pearl-street. The rubbish since then has mostly been cleared away, but the iron pillars which supported the first story had, from some unaccountable cause, been allowed to remain. Saturday afternoon, at about 4½ o'clock, some of the laborers were engaged in the cellars, when the pillars fell with a tremendous crash, one of them striking a workman, named PATRICK DEVAN, upon the head, smashing his skull and scattering his brains in every direction, his more fortunate companions escaping uninjured. The deceased has left a widow and eight children, totally unprovided for, to mourn his loss.

Then it is dipped in a solution of iodide of potassium, consisting of 300 grains to the pint of water. The visible discoloration is apparently removed by the immersion—though such is not really the case, for if the paper thus dipped into a solution of iodide of potassium is exposed it will blacken over. The City and the Census.

A very lively interest is at all times manifested in regard to the office of the Empire State and the Empire City, by the other members of our confederacy, which is very natural, as they are the metropolitan State and City of the Union; and, in fact, New-York is the Metropolis, not only of the United States, but of the New World. It is the [illegible] of art, of commerce, of civilization and [illegible], and it is quite natural that our progress in enlargement and growth in population should attract the attention of the world. It is the inevitable effect of prosperity to excite envy, and envy excites calumny, so that it is not strange that some of our less prosperous neighbors, or at least some to whom Nature has denied the splendid advantages which must ever keep New-York the Queen City of the New World, should endeavor to underrate the greatness of this City and magnify every circumstance calculated to detract from her magnificence and prosperity. But all such attempts must be futile. The superiority of New-York is not owing to any accidental causes; it is based upon her position, upon her commercial advantages, which no accidents can materially injure, nor any political or external causes destroy. The destiny of New-York cannot be averted, and that is to place her at the head of all the cities of the earth, the centre of wealth, of commerce, art, science, literature, and manufactures. She must become the great entrepôt for the whole world, where the financial exchanges with the East and West must be effected, and the common centre from which all the civilized nations of the earth will make their communications with each other. A close scrutiny of the map of this continent will at once show that there is no other spot, either on the Atlantic or on the Pacific, that combines as many advantages as this little Island upon which the City of New-York is built. Added to the great natural advantages of New-York, are the accidental aids of a population composed chiefly of the most adventurous, daring, energetic and liberal inhabitants of other countries, who have been attracted hither by the splendid opportunities which the position of the City offers for intercourse with other parts of the world, and the artificial means of internal communication which the enterprising spirit of the people have constructed. There is nothing, in fact, wanting to add to the grandeur and supremacy of the Empire City; her growth has been natural, and always in advance of the most ardent calculations.

Yet a feeling of disappointment has been expressed by some of our own citizens, and of exultation by some of our neighbors, at the footing up of the Census returns, which do not give either the State or the City so large a population as had been anticipated. But there is surely little cause for disappointment on one side or exultation on the other in the returns of our Census Marshals. New-York will still remain the Empire State and New-York the Empire City.

As to the population of the City, we believe it to be much greater than the Census returns exhibit, and that if it had been taken at a different season of the year, or in a more thorough manner, it would show a result of at least 50,000 more.

But in estimating the growth, population and wealth of New-York, strangers make no account of the great and populous suburbs of the City, which are, in reality, parts of the City itself. Brooklyn, which is the third city in the Union, is, essentially, a part of New-York—as much so as any of the upper Wards; and so are Jersey City, Hoboken, and the almost innumerable towns and villages lying within a circle of thirty miles, and accessible either by steamboat or railroad;—so that the population of New-York, estimated as the population of London is, does not fall short of a million; and a million of industrious and thrifty people, such as our people are, are equal to a million and half such population as crowd the cities of the Old World, where so large a part are paupers, beggars, and other bad subjects, who impoverish rather than add to the wealth of the communities in which they fester.

There is an almost universal conviction that the Census of the City has been taken in a very imperfect manner; but there is no help for it now. At the next National Census, five years hence, we hope that some more efficient plan will be adopted for ascertaining the exact numbers of our various populations.

Potentates of Platte.

Platte County is hard to please in the matter of its popular sovereignty over Kansas. It wants no Northern man to replace Colonel Reeder. Shannon is too arctic; even a Northern man without a Northern side, is very far from suiting the tropical maturity of their views. They clamor, if we may confide in public and private accounts from the element of equator majesty, for a right South-side man, willing to be roped in, like a strand of cotton, with the Stringfellows, and follow the most extravagant lead they may choose to impose. The Governor, in their nomenclature, is a man who can be governed; they have asked for such of Mr. Pierce, and he has most cringingly complied; but they are as ungrateful as the fabulous frogs, when the stork was invested with the throne of Kingdom and the monarchy of the duck-pond. There is only one more thing to be done, if Governor Shannon prove indigestible. Let the President master courage enough to appoint a Southerner—a Slave-holder if he chooses—a very nice, but at the same time an honest man, with a reputation, to find him worth retaining—and let him be the Platte County Governor of Kansas. We question very much whether the scenes of outrage so flourishing lately in the neighborhood of Westport would not abruptly cease under the administration of such an appointee; and a more emphatic assertion of the federal authority find utterance, in place of the treason and lawlessness encouraged by the President. Could any reputable public man of the South be induced to accept the position, we venture to say his very first official act would be to repress the insolence of Platte County, and consult the overslaughed and disregarded population of the Territory. He could not, with any regard to propriety, do otherwise. The only fear is, that a foreknowledge of the fact might prevent the person described from occupying a post of so great difficulty, or from exposing himself to the necessity of being just on that judgment-perverting question of free and slave soil.

State Paupers.

The Pension List in England, even as it now stands, is an anomalous example of misapplied funds. Until very late in the reign of George III., (in fact, during the last days of the Regency,) what is called "the Crown," (which is an alias for the Prime Minister,) had the power of placing any one, as a pensioner, upon the Revenue of the country for any amount. There was no check upon the exercise of this great power. It was done without the knowledge, and independent of the control of Parliament. There was about £1,500,000 annually voted, in those days, for what was called The Civil List; and, when the Minister wanted to bribe any one, the ready way was to grant a pension on the "Civil List" of England, Ireland or Scotland—or sometimes, as the case might be, on the revenue of each country. There are some instances on record where the pensioner has drawn his income from all three sources.

In those days Scotland had only a trifling national revenue; Ireland was heavily taxed and had ampler funds. The Opposition, headed by Grattan, made numerous efforts in the Irish Parliament to limit the amount of pensions granted on the Irish foundation. These efforts failed. The arguments by which they were opposed were feeble—not stronger, on the average, than that brought forward by Sir Boyle Roche, (of bull-making memory,) who declared that it would be rank disloyalty to stop the fountain of royal favor, which should be allowed to "flow freely, spontaneously and abundantly, as that of Holy Well, in Wales, that turns so many mills"—adding, which the orator, himself a pensioner as well as a placeman, had personal reasons for doing, that "indeed some of the best men have drunk of this fountain, which gives honor as well as vigor."

It was with the utmost difficulty that the Irish Parliament, even in the early years of its independence, could obtain a list of the persons who were thus quartered on the fruit of Irish taxation, with the respective amounts paid to each. The document was obtained, however, and made some remarkable disclosures. It showed how brawling patriots were servile pensioners—how Parliamentary votes were rewarded, if not purchased, by successive grants on the Pension-List—how a wife's honor or a daughter's shame was gilded by Treasury gold.

In those "good old times," the Pension List, like charity, covered a multitude of sins. There was no objection, at any time, to leaving it in the power of the Sovereign, with the approval of the Legislature, to employ some portion of the public money to reward merit, to encourage science. But when the general application of the people's money was gross and general, it was time to check the bounty of the Crown, or rather the venal profuseness of the Minister.

In general, the Sovereign had very little voice in this distribution. We recollect very few instances. One undoubtedly was, when, to silence "the great Commoner," as Pitt was called, a peerage was conferred first on his wife, and then upon himself. George III. shrewdly suggested his being placed on the Pension List for £3,000 a year, not to reward his merits or his patriotism, but to lead the public, who had trusted him up to that period, into the belief that he had sold himself (and them) to the Court party. Certain it is that, from the moment he accepted peerage and pension, the great Pitt lost his popularity. Another instance was the grant of £4,000 a year, on the Pension List, to the celebrated Edmund Burke. For forty years that able man had opposed nearly every public measure brought forward or sanctioned by the Ministers of the Crown. He stood before the world as the avowed champion of freedom—he had been proud to proclaim his

Of every villainy in every nation."

He delighted in claiming Charles James Fox as his friend,—he was, par excellence, the patriot of his time. But he was a needy man from the commencement. Fox, who had succeeded to £4,000 a year from his father, and was clerk of the pells in Ireland, (worth £3,000 per annum,) had gamed away his present and future income, by the time he was thirty, and lived on his friends (and the gaming-table) during the rest of his life. Burke, who was too proud to sponge upon his friends, did not disdain to owe £30,000 to his tradesmen. His party, who were subscribing to a fund for purchasing £2,000 annuity for Fox, (which they did in 1798,) made no effort to relieve Burke from his embarrassments. Intimation was given, in a private message from George III., that it would be Mr. Burke's own fault if he continued to feel pecuniary distress. The French Revolution broke out, and Burke took (or made) occasion to quarrel with Fox and all his former friends. Then followed his celebrated pamphlet against the Revolution, and in defence of hereditary monarchy—a book [illegible] his lawyer, every gentleman caught at [illegible]. Immediately after, Burke was placed on the Civil List for a pension of £1,340 a year, and soon after received an addition of £2,500 per annum on the Four and a Half per cent. Fund. The revelation of this large casualty was granted to his wife, who lived to receive it for forty years. Thus was political apostacy rewarded. There was satire, and probably truth, in what was said by Sir Philip Francis, (the reputed author of "Junius,") that if the friends of peace and liberty had subscribed thirty thousand pounds to pay off Burke's debts, there would have been no war against the French Revolution.

In 1834, there was an exciting debate on the Pension List. Mr. Daniel Whittle Harvey, now at the head of the city of London Police, was a vigilant, radical, eloquent member of Parliament, much destrous of popularity, and somewhat moved, (it is charitable to suppose,) by the undoubted blackness of the case. He got up an excitement, in and out of Parliament, on the subject of the Pension List, and required the Government to institute a searching and public inquiry into the grounds on which every pension had been granted, with the avowed intention of striking out every name for whose retention on the list a merit-claim could not be established. Simple and just as this was, the proposal was condemned on all sides. The British House of Commons, as our readers know, does not represent the People. It is composed, in a great degree, of members and connections of the Aristocracy. Nine-tenths of the public pensioners—the whole of those who receive large amounts—more or less belong to what Englishmen love to call "the higher classes."—persons, in short, who are too proud to work for their honest living, but are mean enough to draw pauper-pay, as pensioners, from the hardly-earned wages of the industrial classes. To call on these to show cause why they should thus be fed, lodged, and clothed by the public! There was desecration in the very thought. At that time, a downright liberal Ministry was at the head of affairs in England. Also, too many of their own relations were on the Black List, to render the inquiry pleasant. From the Tory Opposition no support was to be expected, considering how the members and connections of their own families were quartered on the public, and more particularly when it was a notorious fact that in November, 1830, when the Duke of Wellington had to resign office, his last official signature, as Premier, was to a Treasury Warrant granting a pension of £800 per annum to the Honorable Harriet Arbuthnot, wife of his own intimate friend, and generally believed to be his own mistress.

A few disclosures, however, were made. It appeared that Viscount Avonmore, (son of the Irish Judge,) enjoyed £4,199 a year as late Principal Registrar of the Irish Court of Chancery. He draws that pension to this hour, and, as it was granted in 1800, has already received about £230,000. A Mr. Ebrill got £2,336 a year, as late Clerk of Errors, Court of Exchequer. Lord Kenyon drew £2,089 a year, as Custos Brevium of the Queen's Bench. Lord Liverpool had £2,700 a year, as late Prothonotary, Court of Chancery, Lancashire. Mr. Vincent had an annual nest-egg of £5,000, as Queen's Remembrancer, Court of Queen's Bench; and the Earl of Ellenborough, besides drawing £2,089, as his moiety for being joint Custos Brevium of the Queen's Bench, receives £7,700 a year as Chief Clerk of the same Court, having received over £500,000 in all. In every case here mentioned, the duties were performed by deputy.

The result of Whittle Harvey's agitation was a compromise, viz.: that the existing Pension List should not be disturbed, and that no pension of any amount (save for superannuations, and other circumstances specially provided for by existing statutes) should be granted without the concurrence of Parliament. At the same time, the Sovereign (i. e. the Prime Minister) was allowed to grant £1,200 every year among deserving and eminent persons who had distinguished themselves in literature, science or art. Pensions to this amount are annually granted—the sum thus disbursed, on the whole, being about £25,000 a year. As we instanced, yesterday, even these grants are abused, when only £150 a year is given out of the £1,200, to persons connected with literature. However, it is better than it was a few years ago, when Lord Melbourne gave £1,000 a year, in two successive years, out of this fund, to Mademoiselle Eese, (now Lady Trubr,) simply because she was Queen Victoria's left-handed cousin; also putting Baroness Lehzen, the Queen's confidential ante-nuptial Secretary, on the same fund for £400 a year, together with Her Majesty's music, language, singing and dancing teachers, for a like amount. The whole subject of British Pensions and Sinecures, is a very profitable one for the people of a republican government to study.

Alderman Briggs in the Field Again.

Since the return of Judge Daly he has amended his former order, compelling the refractory witnesses before the Briggs Committee to answer the questions which that grave and potent personage should see fit to propound to them; and McKellar, the Police Clerk, and all others who are suspected of knowing anything which Alderman Briggs wishes to be informed of will be compelled to stand up and make clean breasts of their perilous secrets. As the Alderman has had nearly four months to reflect upon the great business which he has undertaken, to weigh all the moral consequences dependent upon it, and to form a correct judgment of the public opinion in reference to his exploits, we trust he will manifest a greater regard for the public good than he has done, and not persist in diverting the time of public officers by an attempt to screw [illegible] of [illegible] which can be of no possible value to himself or anybody else. We guess the Alderman felt his investigating Committee serve the purpose of a tub thrown to a whale, or the tin kettle which was tied to the tail of Alcibiades' dog: it diverts the attention of the public, and himself too, from worse offenders than those he seeks to punish. Alderman Briggs may not be aware of his resemblance to a Roman Emperor, but while he is engaged with his Committee, he is like Nero fiddling, while Rome was burning. We would not deprive the Alderman of any of his triumphs over the Chief of Police and his contumacious Clerk, but we hope he means to make very brief work of his investigations into the secrets of the dog-pound, the birth-place of Mr. Matsell, and other important matters, now that he has full power from Judge Daly to go ahead.

Australian Prospects.

The Australian Colonies present a deeply interesting aspect just now; driven as they are by the force of circumstances into a position, affording a somewhat faint resemblance to the American Colonies at the period immediately preceding our own revolutionary struggle for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Seen there may be a more striking likeness between our country eighty years ago and Australia to-day.

The gold mines have brought within our own times that destiny for Australia which, though inevitable, would not have been fulfilled for many years to come at the rate of its growth previous to the discovery of that "yellow earth, the white man worships as his God." The great increase of population within the past four years has, as it were, filled out the proportions of the figure which is destined to grapple with the Home Government; assume its powers and discard its despotism. The emigration consists of the hardiest and most daring sons of Europe, adventurous, able-bodied men; men who were not paupers, for the passage-money to Australia would in European countries, be accounted a sufficient sum, though small, to start some sort of a business from which a living would be insured. In embarking their all, they seek to rise above that position which it would accord to them at home; and feeling there is no retreat but in poverty, they will needs risk life on the chances of prosperity. The varied nature of the emigration also, gives a more expansive character to the desires of the adopted Tasmanians. Some three years ago Mr. Marshall, member of Congress from California, speaking of the nature of the population of that State, and of its being made up of delegates, so to speak, from every State in the Union, characterized it as "a great unpacked, uninfluenced, disinterested National Convention, composed of the best material, men proven by the test of emigration to the West." This is also true, but in a less degree, however, of Australia. It is a convention to some extent of the European nations, (with the addition of delegates from the United States.) The great question with it is "Ways and Means," of the creation of which, by and for themselves, they emphatically claim the right. The magnitude of various, though common necessities, creates a unity of strength, and by the last advices we see that the Revolution proceeds with commendable determination. The only blood spilt yet has been at Ballarat in December; and has tended to augment distrust of the Colonial Government, and to vigorously increase the action of the people.

The Government has been acting in opposition to the Legislative Council, and from imposing a protection, amounting to a despotism over the people, and especially at the gold fields, have gone to the other extremes of giving no protection at all. With the plea of reducing expenses, the police force has been so curtailed that life and property are menanced by those marauders which ever abound on the outskirts of a new and hetero geneously formed community. Meetings have been held, and at Ballarat (the scene of the first bloodshed,) the miners have determined to take the law into their own hands. And instead of preventing collision and outrage, the Legislative Council has just passed an act "designed to grant compensation to parties whose property may be injured or destroyed during a disturbance." This is what the Irish characterize as cutting your head and then giving you a plaster.

Meanwhile, the Land Question is being much agitated. In this we see a fundamental principle of revolution, although the Australian journals state its position to be as unsettled as ever. Land is life. Every man who would be free desires a hold on the ground, and it is not possible that in Australia, a new, expansive country, the men who work the soil will be content with any feudal tenure, any twenty or thirty years' lease, which puts the lease-holder in the position of an apprentice, whose comparatively unrequited labors return to the "master." With such room it is ridiculous to imagine the settlers as anything but the owners of the soil, and having a common interest in the protection of each other, they cannot possibly put up with any such system, any cen-acre means of existence, which is the curse of the Irish peasantry.

A bill of indictment against the Home and Colonial Governments has appeared in the shape of a pamphlet on the Land Question, which has commanded much attention, and on reviewing which, the Melbourne Age recommends to the attentive perusal of England. This journal, the ablest and most vigorous of the Opposition press, considers that it is too late now to turn the tide of popular feeling, and confidently declares that the people of Victoria will, to a man, insist on the dismissal of the Governor, and "a revised new Constitution—and both these they will have—or else the alternative."

Among other noticeable events, recording Colonial progress, may be mentioned the inauguration of a University at Melbourne—the starting of a Monthly Magazine at the same city, and the proclamation of four new quartz copelites in the same vicinity.

Vendors of Vegetables.

After a long season, during which pumpkins have ripened, and cabbages come to a head, the Market Gardeners and the Huckesters are again occupying the attention of the Common Council, and filling their full share of space in the columns of the daily papers. On Monday night, the Committee, to whom the subject was referred in the Board of Councilmen, made a very sensible report which allots certain standing room for the farmers' wagons, and gives very good reasons for not interfering with the huckesters' stands. But the Committee did not attempt to give any reasons why the Venders of Vegetables, above all other dealers in the daily necessaries of life, should be allowed the privilege of using the public streets to sell their commodities in, and thus escape the charge for rent which all other dealers are compelled to pay. While the Marketmen and Gardeners are allowed to occupy the streets with their wagons, they will never attempt to find themselves better quarters, but will be content to drive a kind of nomadic and uncertain traffic, as little profitable to themselves as to the purchasers of their commodities. To fully comprehend the beauties of the present system of vegetable-selling in New-York, it is necessary to make an early visit to the purlieus of Washington Market on a fine morning at this season of the year, when a scene of turmoil and confusion will be revealed which no one can have a conception of who has not witnessed it. Although the Market Gardeners complain that the huckesters monopolize all the profits of the vegetable traffic, it is well known that there is no business which pays better, in the neighborhood of New-York, than that of raising vegetables for our markets, and those who engage in it can very well afford to pay for all the accommodations which the nature of their business requires.

Who Struck the First Blow!

From the conflicting and wholly irreconcilable statements of the Louisville papers, it is still impossible to decide which of the two parties, the Sog-Nights or Know-Nothings, committed the first act of violence which led to the terrible riots. The Journal is most solemn and violent in its assertions that the Foreigners fired the first shot; but a correspondent of the Evening Post, in Louisville, who says he has been at great pains to obtain accurate information, has no doubt that the first blow was struck by the "Americans." However, let who will have struck the first blow, there is no doubt as to who struck the most blows or the last one. When we receive the affidavits and mass of testimony published by the Journal on Monday, we may be able to form a more correct opinion on the subject; but it will probably never be satisfactorily determined who struck the first blow, though it is pretty well established that each was prepared to strike on the first opportunity that should occur. The Journal says:

"We find by perusal of the comments of the distant papers on the riots of Monday, that they are under the impression that there was but one riot. For their information we state that there were two distinct scenes of riot, that occurred at different times and at distant points. The riot in the First Ward occurred about 2 o'clock and was all over at 3½ o'clock; that in the Eighth Ward began about 6 o'clock. The places are more than a mile and a half apart, and in the First Ward the chief assailants were Germans, and in the latter exclusively Irish."

The Republican Movement.

A very large meeting of the friends of the Republican movement was held in Portland, Maine, yesterday, at which many speeches were made by prominent men of several States. The essence of the remarks of the principal speakers was, that at the present time there is in reality but one issue before the people, and that is Slavery. The position the North must take, they believe, is unyielding opposition to the extension of Slavery; and for that purpose, and that it may be effectual, a fusion of all parties opposed to the wider spread of that institution is considered necessary.

The Whig Convention held in Allegheny County, Penn., yesterday, took ground in favor of the Republican movement; and similar action has been taken by portions of the citizens of Washington, D. C.

A dispatch from Springfield, Mass., informs us that a meeting to initiate a fusion of the Anti-Administration feeling of the State is to be held there on Thursday, and that great beneficial results are expected to flow from it. A large number of distinguished men are said to favor the movement. The following are named as supporting it warmly: The venerable Samuel Hoar and ex-Senator Rockwell, Hon. Increase Sumner, ex-Governor Boutwell; Mr. Banks and H. W. Cushman are expected to give it their favor.

☞ Our news from Mexico is of a most interesting kind. It would seem that the revolution has now gained sufficient importance to indicate early changes of a serious character.

Texas Election.

From Texas we learn that Mr. Pease, Democrat, was supposed to be reelected Governor. Ex-Governor Bell is elected to Congress.

Dramatic.

Wallack's Theatre.—A performance of private theatricals takes place here to-night, in compliment to Mr. O. T. P. Ware, a literary gentleman, who has written several successful plays for the New-York theatres. A number of distinguished amateurs will make their first appearance, prominent among whom is Miss Ada Clare, a lady of great personal attractions and endowments.

There will, we trust, be a good attendance. Entertainments of this kind are not of frequent occurrence, and possess unusual interest.

A Farmer's Observations.

It is a source of much gratification to farmers that a journal of the acknowledged ability of the Times expresses a determination to devote considerable attention to agricultural pursuits. Always a favorite in the "rural districts," it is now received with much more substantial welcome, and the benefits resulting from it, no doubt, will be worthy of its noble intention.

Jumping On and Off of Moving Cars.

That's right, economical old friend, who can afford to wait till a car stops to get on or off of it, jump, and save a minute and show your agility. And to-morrow jump again and get your leg smashed or your arm sprained, and then lay groaning for a month and lamenting your folly.

Soberly, though, the time gained by impatient men in jumping on or off cars while in motion, is not worth the risk that the doctors will give you to make your relations of your pain while the communicated bone is working out through the [illegible] parts. So it is a very foolish trick and not to be tried except by those who are homeless and want to be boarded gratuitously in Bellevue Hospital. When you wish to get off a car, always go to the rear end, so that, whatever happens, you'll not get under the wheels, and, ringing the bell, wait till the car is still, and step out like a sober, sensible gentleman, you know. When you get on, if right lively, it may do to step on at the rear end if the team is walking, but upon the front platform don't try to mount while the engine or the team is moving, unless you wish to figure next day in the papers under the head of "Coroner's Inquests," and in the case of the arrival of a steamer, be crowded out even at that.

☞ The Methodist Protestant Church of North Illinois propose to hold a Conventional Mass Meeting in Centre Grove, Bureau County, Illinois, on the 17th of August next, to agree upon some plan for separating said Church from its original connection with Slavery. Both ministers and members are invited to be present.—St. Louis Advocate.

READY THIS MORNING,
MY BONDAGE AND MY FREEDOM.
BY FREDERICK DOUGLASS.
One vol., 12mo., 464 pp. Price $1 25.
This book is one worthy of high street praise, notice. The fact that its author belongs to a race proscribed as the very worst one that exists, should, if anything, lay him open to the severest criticism. Yet, when we read the following, we feel that the author is a man, and that, if he is a man, he is one of no common order.
TWENTY ONE YEARS A SLAVE!
Gives to it an importance that does not attach to an ordinary narrative.
If the author's own experience, the above the wrongs and sufferings inflicted upon
THREE MILLIONS OF SLAVES,
And the bondage in which the Slave-power attempts to hold
TWENTY MILLIONS OF FREEMEN!

whose whole career has been carefully traced in these pages, has had
JUSTICE DONE TO HIS ENTERPRISE AND COURAGE
by an impartial hand. The simple, uncontroverted, and

KINGSLEY'S NEW BOOK.
GLAUCUS;
OR, THE WONDERS OF THE SHORE.
By CHARLES KINGSLEY, author of "Hypatia," "Amyas Leigh," &c. 1 vol., 16mo. Price 50 cents.
From the London Spectator.
A middle-aged friend with a family starting on his annual excursion to the sea-side may be called the text of this volume. The wonders that he will see—the wonders he will bring with the same or mischief on the part of his children. And then he shows how this cannot might be got rid of by a taste for natural history. The sea-shore and its wonders are not, however, the only, though it is a prominent theme. Geology, living animals, the history and literature of natural history, are rapidly handled. With these topics are mingled others that relate to manners or morals. This is not done in a dry or dead-lively litterateur manner, but with a spirit arising from the convictions of a man who has looked on life with reference to its actual and its ideal state of mind. The general remarks show the wide sympathy, the deep thought and the rich eloquence that characterize Mr. Kingsley.
From the Traveller.
This is a charming little book, and one that is in every respect worthy of the high reputation of the author of "Hypatia." Its matter and its style are alike attractive; and in the whole management of its argument, and in the felicitous choice of the illustrations by which it is enforced, we discover the hand of the true scholar and well trained writer. one individual. It is in bad taste to suppose the national Congress is to be made the vehicle of the presumptuous distribution of public patronage.

Upon the other hand, I have endeavored all years I have been governed by considerations of justice and duty, and have designed to observe the oath of my country's Constitution. When members of Congress engage in a steeple chase, to see who shall propose earliest, give most and vote loudest, to feed suffering Ireland from the Federal Treasury a few years since, not finding any warrant for such proceedings I voted against it, and let public clamor exhaust itself upon my head in denunciations. When I learned that the foreigner who had in good faith declared his intentions of citizenship, by setting his foot upon a foreign shore in case of shipwreck, without any intention of remaining abroad, lost the benefit of his proceedings, I introduced and procured the passage of a bill to endeavor the grievance. These principles have governed my public conduct and now guide my opinions. The Constitution administered in its true spirit is, in my judgment, sufficient for the protection of all, whether native or naturalized, and for the redress of all political evils which can be reached by human government.

I have the honor to be your friend and servant,

From the Philadelphia Ledger, Aug. 11.

Sunday morning, about 11 o'clock, a sad and fatal occurrence happened at Atlantic City, which marred the pleasure of many at that favorite watering-place. It appears that Mr. WILLIAM BOYD, Mrs. ANDREWS, the wife of a contractor on the North Pennsylvania Railroad; Mrs. BOYD, wife of the brother of WM. BOYD; Mrs. ANDREWS and daughter, Mr. MCINTIRE and a young lady—all residents of Mauch Chunk and vicinity—went down to the beach on Sunday morning, at 11 o'clock, for the purpose of bathing. The place selected for the purpose was the spot known as the Inlet, some distance above the United States Hotel.

The party had been in the water but a short time before Mr. WM. BOYD and Mrs. ANDREWS disappeared, but the others, thought they were only sporting. But after watching some moments, and not seeing them, alarm seized upon the others, and while some of them were thus startled, Mrs. BOYD was taken under by the undertow, as it is supposed. The remainder of the party made their way out of the water, though with some difficulty. In a very short time the bodies of Mrs. ANDREWS and Mrs. BOYD were seen floating upon the water, and by the assistance of Mr. ROBERTS of Abington, Mr. BROWN of Philadelphia, and a gentleman on the beach, they were brought to the shore.

Here every means were resorted to for the purpose of resuscitating them by Dr. MITCHELL, of Philadelphia, and Dr. ANDRESS, of Camden, N. J., and several others, and after several hours' labor Mrs. BOYD was so far recovered as to be able to speak. Mrs. ANDREWS was too far gone for the labors of her friends to be of any avail. The body of Mr. WM. BOYD was found floating near the spot where he was drowned, about one hour after the accident. The bodies were brought to this city yesterday afternoon, and taken to Mauch Chunk in charge of the friends of the deceased. This is near the same place where Mr. GOLDEY was drowned on the Fourth of July. The ground is dangerous in consequence of deep holes, and no one unacquainted with the beach should venture to bathe at this point, which is some distance from the regular bathing ground.

Serious Accident on the Western Railroad—Two Persons Killed.

From the Albany Argus, Aug. 14.

Yesterday afternoon, just as the Express train from Boston, on the above road, had passed Chatham Centre, a most lamentable accident occurred, in which two passengers, gentlemen, suffered severe personal injury. The train was coming down the grade at a high rate of speed, and when passing a freight car, which was standing on a switch track—the freight car having swing doors—the entire side of the second passenger car was taken off as neatly and thoroughly as it could have been done with a saw. Mr. D. TAFT, of Charleston, S. C., who was sitting with his elbow resting on the window-sill, lost his arm—it having been cut off twice, below and above the elbow.

A German, residing in the lower part of the city, but whose name we were unable to learn, had his arm-bone broken in such a manner that it protruded through the flesh.

So instantaneous was the work of destruction done, that it was not until the train arrived at Kinderhook that the conductor was aware that any accident had happened. Several lady passengers on the train, with considerable magnanimity, stripped off their superfluous linen, with which to bind up the arm of Mr. TAFT, who came on to this city. Drs. ARNSBY and SPENCER were called, and attended to him at the Delavan House.

We hear it stated that the locomotive in charge of the train was the new one, the "Panama," and that she was being run to test her speed.

The German's name was ANDREW BECKER.

Disappearance of Four Men.

A party of five persons from this vicinity left the Charles Island House, off Milford, on Thursday evening of last week, in a sail-boat, and after proceeding several miles to Branford Point, where they landed one of their number, (THOMAS BRADDOCK, of this city,) it was supposed they set out to return to the hotel; but nothing had been heard of them at EARLE's up to Saturday night. A hard blow came on soon after they left the Point, and the Sound was rough. The party may have gone to some other place on the Sound, or there is a possibility (it is hoped not a probability) that they are lost. They were JOHN DEAN, Jr., of this city; WARREN ANDERSON, of East Hartford; —— ANDERSON, (his brother,) and a Mr. SMITH, who was the boatman to the hotel at Charles Island.—*Hartford (Conn.) MARKET REPORTS.

Markets. Carefully reported for the N. Y. Daily Times.

TUESDAY, Aug. 14—6 P. M.

ASHES—Are rather more sought after, and are firm at $6 12½ for Pots, and $6 31¼@$6 37½ for Pearls, ⅌ 100 lbs.

BEESWAX—There were 1,400 lbs. yellow sold at 27½c @28c. ⅌ lb.

The public sales reached 4,500 mats Java at 13c.@14½c., and 2,550 bags Rio at 10c @ 11½c. ⅌ lb. The demand is increasing, and as there is less offering, holders ask very full prices.

COTTON—In the absence of the Union, with three days' later news from Europe, there is no inclination to move freely, and the market is without activity, though remaining steady:

NEW-YORK CLASSIFICATION.	Uplands.	Florida.	Mobile.	New-Orleans and Texas.
Ordinary, ⅌ lb.	9¼	9¼	9¼	9¼
Middling	11½	11½	11½	11½
Middling Fair	12	12	12½	12½
Fair	12½	12½	12	12½

FISH—Dry Cod continue in fair demand, but as there is a better supply in market, prices rule languid, though not lower. Mackerel are seemingly scarce and needed at full previous rates. No important variation has occurred in Herrings.

FLOUR AND MEAL—State and Western brands are coming forward in very small quantities, and as the inquiry, especially for the home trade, is still good, prices of all desirable kinds continue to tend upwards. Very common qualities are scarcely noticed and are unsettled in value. The day's sales amount to 7,000 bbls. within our revised range:

Inferior State	$6 00 @ $6 12½
Ordinary State	6 25 @ 6 37½
Straight State	6 37½ @ 6 62½
Favorite and Extra State	6 62½ @ 7 00
Mixed Western	5 62½ @ 5 75
Common to good Indiana and Michigan	5 75 @ 6 00
Fancy Michigan	6 12½ @ 6 12½
Common to Good Ohio	5 75 @ 6 00
Fancy Ohio	6 00 @ 6 25
Extra Ohio	6 25 @ 6 50
Extra Indiana and Michigan	6 25 @ 6 50
Fancy Genesee	6 62½ @ 6 87½
Extra Genesee	6 87½ @ 7 00

Canadian is unchanged. The day's sales amount to 600 bbls., inferior common to choice extra brands, at $6 62½@$7 ⅌ bbl. Southern continues in slack request, and languid in price, with sales for the day of 400 bbls. inferior mixed to fine extra grade, at $6 50@$10 50 ⅌ bbl. Rye Flour is still scarce, and worth $7 50@$9 for fine and superfine, ⅌ bbl. Corn Meal is sparingly dealt in, at $4 50 for Jersey, and $4 87½ for Brandywine, ⅌ bbl.

GRAIN—Wheat is entirely nought after the arrival of the steamer was read for export, and in all the markets. The day's sales consist of 11,000 bushels Southern at $2 10@$2 15 for White, and at $2 00@$2 10 for red, ⅌ bushel, some very fine red was reported by a City miller as low as $1 70 ⅌ bushel, but this was under the low-water market rate. Rye is in light stock and firm at $1 25@$1 27 ⅌ bushel. Corn is rather more active, with sales of 1,100 bushels new, in lots, at $1 20@$1 22 ⅌ bushel. Big and Western Oats are steadier and tending to advance, with sales of 10,000 bushels at 50c.@51c. ⅌ bushel. Corn is rare and being in good request, in a steady manner. The day's movement adds up 12,000 bushels Western mixed, mostly at 52c@57c. ⅌ bushel.

HAY—Hay is more freely offered, and is rather heavy at 87½c@$1 25 for New and Old, ⅌ 100 lbs.

HEMP—Remains quiet, but is stiffly held. The supplies of all kinds have been materially reduced by recent sales, and holders now evince much firmness.

HOPS—Are still inactive and languid at 18c.@22c., mostly at 19½c @20c. ⅌ lb.

IRON—Scotch Pig is rather more abundant, and not being so actively inquired for as it formerly, 100 tons changed hands to-day at $26 25@$27 50, usual terms, ⅌ ton. Nothing new has occurred in other descriptions.

LATHS—Eastern are pretty freely dealt in, mostly at $1 42½ ⅌ thousand. The supply is adequate to the demand, which precludes any material rise.

LEAD—Sales were reported to-day of 50 tons foreign at $6 [illegible] 12½, and a small lot of Galena at $6 12½ cash ⅌ 100 lbs. The market is quiet, but steady.

MOLASSES—The light stock and high claims of holders continue to check transactions. Sales were reported of 214 bbls. New-Orleans at 25c.@30c., mostly at 27c., and some Cuba Muscovado in bbds., at 31c. ⅌ gallon.

NAVAL STORES—Crude Turpentine is rather more in request, and is held at $2c@$2 10½ ⅌ 280 lbs. Spirits do. is pretty freely dealt in at the reduced rates of 40c@42c. ⅌ gallon. The stock is not large, but is above than equal to the wants of buyers. Tar and Rosin are unaltered.

OILS—We can notice no new features in the market for Whale, Sperm or Olive. Linseed is in little demand, but is without improvement in values. Lard varies as last noticed.

PROVISIONS—Pork is arriving slowly, and being in request, it is increasing in price. The day's sales are 600 bbls. in lots, at $19 75@$19 87½, and $19 50@$19 62½ for New Mess; $16 50 for Prime; and $16 37½@$16 47 for New Prime ⅌ bbl. Cut Meats are in good request, but quite scarce and nominally unchanged. Lard continues quiet, and heavy, within a range of from 9½c@10c ⅌ lb. Beef continues pretty active at full rates: 300 bbls. were disposed of during the day at $9 75@$10 25 for Prime; $11@$13 for Country Mess; $15 50@$16 for repacked Mess, and $17 for extra do., ⅌ bbl. Prime Mess Beef continues dull and heavy, within a range of from $8@$9 ⅌ tc. Beef Hams remain inactive and languid at from $15@$16 ⅌ bbl. Butter is in demand at 15c.@16c. for Ohio; 15c.@20c. for ordinary to good State, and 21c @25c for choice do., ⅌ lb. Cheese is selling at from 8c@9c. ⅌ lb.

SOAP—There were 150 boxes Castile disposed of at 10½c. ⅌ lb.

SUGARS—The market is not so brisk, but possesses equal firmness. The day's sales reach 870 hhds., chiefly Cuba, but including some Porto Rico and New-Orleans at 9½c.@9¾c. ⅌ lb.

TALLOW—We heard of sales of 20,000 lbs. Prime within the last two days at old figures.

TOBACCO—The market for this article maintains its firmness, and transactions, particularly in seed-leaf, continue large. The bulk of about 100 hhds. Kentucky, brought on from Nassau, N. P., part of a cargo wrecked in that vicinity, sold in bulk from the vessel at very fair rates. The other sales comprise 62 hhds. Kentucky, at 7½c.@11½c.; 115 bales Havana, at 32c @65c.; 432 cases Seedleaf, at 11c.@16c. ⅌ lb.

WHISKY—There were 200 barrels Ohio and Prison sold at 41c.@41½c. ⅌ gallon. Stock limited, and receipts light.

FREIGHTS—For Liverpool the engagements include about 23,000 bushels Grain, in bulk and bags, mostly at 4½d.@4¾d. ⅌ bushel; some Cotton at 5-32d @ 3-16d. ⅌ lb., and Cheese at 20s.@22s. 6d. ⅌ ton. For London, there were reported as having been shipped some small lots of Rosin and Crude Turpentine at 1s. 6d @1s. 9d. ⅌ bbl. The quotation for Spirits Turpentine was 5s. ⅌ bbl. For other ports there was not much done, and rates were somewhat nominal.

Produce Markets.

WEDNESDAY, Aug. 15, 1855.

The prices given in our reports from week to week, are the average wholesale prices obtained by producers, and not those at which produce is sold from the market. The variations in prices refer chiefly to the quality of the articles.

The tendency to decline in prices to which we referred last week still continues. In market language, "stuff is growing plentier." With the exception of Apples, all fruits, as well as vegetables in season, are a little lower than last week.

COMMON POTATOES are bringing 44c. instead of 50c., and the supply and quality is such that no Potato eater ought to complain. They will probably be considerably lower soon. We see that the vines are dying in many parts of the surrounding country, but we hear little complaint as yet of rot in the market.

TOMATOES scarcely reach 50c. ⅌ bushel this week, instead of 62½c, although just in their prime. The marketmen say they never were better, and they really do look luscious. The baskets are quite full, and some of them a little more—something strange for New-York certainly.

PEARS, small, green and hard, are plentiful, and are bringing almost nothing, which is all they are worth, but the "Bells" which have reached maturity, are in good request at full prices; good APPLES are selling high and are in good demand.

MELONS have come in from New-Jersey during the week, and are bringing as all early produce does, very remunerative prices. WATER MELONS are worth $20@$30 ⅌ 100; MUSK MELONS sell at $2 50@$3 50 ⅌ bbl.

BUTTER is quoted at the same rates as last week—that is, 18c.@22c. for Fresh in pails, although there has been some disposition among grocers to raise the price at retail during the week. CHEESE has declined a little.

New-Jersey EGGS are quoted a trifle higher by the dozen than EGGS from this State, as they are a little fresher and consequently less liable to loss.

BUILDING MATERIALS.

ROOFING SLATE.

PRICES GREATLY REDUCED!—WHY NOT USE IT?—IT IS CHEAPER, HANDSOMER, MORE DURABLE, MORE FIRE PROOF THAN METAL and can be as readily applied and laid on.

THE EAGLE SLATE COMPANY, of Castleton, Vermont,

INVITE THE ATTENTION of Builders, Architects, and the public generally, to their GREEN AND PURPLE ROOFING SLATE, which, being superior to any hitherto quarried in this country, is recommended for GREATNESS STRENGTH AND DURABILITY OF COLOR, as FULLY EQUAL TO THE WELSH. It can also be transported cheaply to any of the STATES CANADA, OR THE WEST INDIES.

The Company, while calling the attention of the public to the article produced by them, would remark of SLATE FOR ROOFING PURPOSES in general, that the cheapness with which it is produced and laid on, the great protection against fires and the heat of the Summer, with the fact that it never requires painting—lasting a lifetime without repairs, renders it SUPERIOR TO ANY OTHER ROOFING MATERIAL. They therefore invite all Committees for the erection of public institutions and persons building first-class residences in town or country, to investigate the subject.

They refer to the following respectable writers for information as to the quality of the article manufactured by them, viz.:

JOHN BRODIE, No. 697 Washington-st., New-York.

EDWARD CROMMELIN, No. 695 Washington-st., New-York.

THOMAS LEWIS, No. 46 Rose-st., New-York.

Communications addressed to J. W. KIDMAN, Castleton, Vt., or to G. FURMAN, Jr., at the depot of the Company, No. 366 West 13th-st., New-York, will meet prompt attention.

NEW-YORK, June 20, 1855.

Messrs. COLBURN & NASH: I have seen and heard several of your Melodions, manufactured by Goodman & Baldwin, and consider them to be neat and expressive instruments, of pleasing and delicate tone, well calculated for the accompaniment of voices in the performance of sacred music, and adapted to serve as precursors of Organs in churches where want of funds or of space will not yet permit the introduction of those more orthodox and ponderous pieces of musical mechanism. TRIESEMAR—THE GREAT EUROPEAN DISCOVERY—Patronized by Royal Letters Patent of England, and received by the order of the Ecole de Pharmacie de Paris, and the Imperial College of Medicine, Vienna.

TRIESEMAR No. 1.—Is the remedy for general debility, loss of virile power, premature decay, and all the distressing consequences arising from early vice. Its effects are efficacious in youth, manhood and old age; the virile powers would not become impaired, even in the decline of life, if the Triesemar were universally adopted; all physical immediate results like magic before its influence, thus rendering its use invaluable to those entering the marriage state.

THE PESTILENCE.

Who Walked Forth on Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The Petersburg Express has the subjoined intelligence from Portsmouth at Norfolk:

PETERSBURG, Thursday, Aug. 9.

The yellow fever still ravages our community, although it is estimated that up to this period fully 6,000 have left town. For one or two days past the deaths have been about twelve per diem, with an increase in the number of patients. I think, however, that the disease is not as bad to-day, as I have not heard of many new cases. To-day I am acting as a member of the Sanitary Committee, and have written about ten permits for the Naval Hospital, including those given by physicians. Half of these, perhaps, have been sick several days, although I believe, with one or two exceptions only, this is the first day medical aid has been called in.

Among those of your acquaintance now sick are Mr. JOHN JACK, taken yesterday; Dr. B. C. SPRATLEY, convalescent; Dr. R. H. PARKER, a most useful man, and one that our community can ill afford to lose, is supposed to be dying; Dr. JOS. N. SCHOOLFIELD, chairman of the sanitary committee, was taken this morning about 8 o'clock, while engaged at his writing desk, and is now at the Naval Hospital, though quite sick, he is doing well. Mr. WM. B. COLLINS is much better. CHARLES PIERCE, son of our Mayor, D. D. PIERCE, Esq., has been very sick, but is better. Mr. GEO. CAMPBELL, from whom I have not heard to-day, was better last night.

The disease is confined to no locality, but in my opinion extends to every part of Portsmouth. When taken in connection with the mortality, the unfeasibility of the disease or bad state of preparation to meet it, the alarm it has created, and the large number who have died, I question if any community has been more badly scourged and afflicted. The whole surrounding country is overrun—private houses, barns, kitchens, schoolhouses, churches, tents, cabins, (and the Lord only knows what other kinds of shelter,) are all crowded.

I greatly apprehend that when the mortality of those who have died and those remaining shall be correctly summed up, it will be found far greater among the former than the latter. The emigration has left us a deserted town—entire streets have only one or two families remaining, districts depopulated, hotels and stores closed, business suspended, and society disrupted. Poor Portsmouth! She presents a sad and desolate appearance, and some time must elapse before she can recover from the terrible shock that has prostrated her.

Since writing the above some twelve or fifteen cases have occurred, of which, I have just been informed. J. G. H.

THE FEVER AT NORFOLK.

I am sorry to add that our sister city—sister in affliction as well as locality—is suffering with us, and I fear to a greater extent. I had feared all along that if the disease was not eradicated there before it had time to spread it must prevail to an alarming extent. Such I learned this morning was to be the case. A gentleman informed me to-day that he was at H——'s store last night, when he was informed that there were sixty cases in the Post House. The same gentleman told me that they had erected one or two tents by the Post House, and had still to enlarge, or make other arrangements. They contemplated at first the occupation of the Fair Grounds, but objections being raised, they determined to procure the Race Field building, and have, I understand, succeeded. J. G. H.

STILL LATER.

PORTSMOUTH, Friday night, Aug. 10.—There is but little abatement of the disease which now pervades every part of our town. Dr. PARKER died to-day. He leaves a large family. CONRAD and Dr. SPRATLEY are better. JOHN JACK is quite comfortable.

There are now about forty cases in the Naval Hospital. We had some eight interments yesterday, and there will be probably a larger number to-day. The number of new cases, however, is not so great.

It pains me to add that our sister town of Norfolk is suffering greatly. It yields to treatment generally, but the mortality is yet very great.

Dr. J. P. SCHOOLFIELD is quite ill.

The Express in its editorial column, says: "A gentleman from Hampton, who saw a friend from Portsmouth yesterday morning, informs us that there were twenty deaths from fever in Norfolk on Saturday, and seven in Portsmouth. The number of new cases was not ascertained."

We are truly pained to hear that Dr. JOSEPH N. SCHOOLFIELD, heretofore reported as quite ill, is decidedly better, having much improved since our arrival. Apart from the severe loss to his family, the community of Portsmouth can but little afford to spare so useful and deserving a citizen. We trust that we may be soon enabled to announce his entire recovery.

Rev. Mr. HANDY, pastor of the Middle-street Presbyterian Church, Portsmouth, who has been quite ill of the fever, we are pleased to hear is now considered out of danger.

It was reported on Friday, on good authority, that two or three cases of yellow fever had been manifested among the refugees at Hampton, which created such a panic that the steamer Coffee, full of passengers, was ordered off and not permitted to land.

The Richmond Dispatch says: "Mr. ROBERT WELT, a well-known citizen of Portsmouth, died at Hampton, on Thursday; on Friday Mr. NATHANIEL SOHNY, an old citizen of Norfolk, died after a protracted illness.

The Baltimore steamers have again commenced coming up to the quarantine ground at Portsmouth, and there receiving passengers from the ferry-boat.

The Express to show that yellow fever is not contagious, states that among the first victims at Portsmouth was a young married man, and that three of his young friends volunteered to attend on him, in company with his wife. They were with him, day and night, for a week, as was also Rev. THOMAS HUNT. The Express adds:

During the last stages of the disease, and after that unerring precursor of the grim monster had made its appearance, (the black vomit) the patient was frequently seized with spasms, during which the copious discharges would flow spontaneously from the mouth, completely covering those who waited at his bed-side. The Minister of God, to hear the responses to questions propounded, was compelled to place his ear in close proximity to the patient's mouth, his voice having become so feeble that he could not articulate above a whisper. The distressed and heart-stricken wife embraced the diseased body of her husband, kissed again and again his burning cheek, and bathed his swarthy brow with scalding tears.

Relief for the Sufferers.

From the Baltimore Sun, Aug. 14.

The accounts from Norfolk and Portsmouth, Va., of the distress consequent upon the ravages of the yellow fever are of a gloomy character—so much so as to afford an impressive admonition to us here away to be up and doing in the discharge of a common duty we owe to humanity, in our fortunate exemption from the terrible scourge. At Portsmouth, business, in a great measure, is suspended, hundreds have left the place, and every thing is said to appear desolate and forlorn, as if the pall of death had fallen upon all that had once moved and breathed. Many have also left Norfolk to escape the epidemic and others are daily leaving. A large number of families have come to this city, and others have gone to the District of Columbia, Richmond, Petersburg, &c., leaving their business entirely neglected. Their intense anxiety under the distressing circumstances may well be imagined.

But what must be the condition of those who, remaining behind, have been stricken down by the disease, and are now surrounded by but few beside the dead and the dying! Is not their case one that appeals forcibly to our generous sympathies and active benevolence. The citizens of Baltimore are peculiarly blessed with good health and prosperity—we will, we are confident, be glad of an opportunity to extend ready "aid and comfort" to their afflicted neighbors; and, therefore, we suggest that some of our prominent citizens should take prompt measures to inaugurate a system of relief, and designate a responsible person or persons to receive such contributions as may be tendered. The citizens of Baltimore have ever been generous on such occasions, and we feel assured they will, in the present emergency, fully sustain their reputation.

The citizens of Norfolk have formed a "Howard Association," similar to the one at New-Orleans, whose labors during the cholera and yellow fever epidemics in the latter place, have resulted in so much benefit to the sick at different periods. They consist of Messrs. W. B. FERGUSON, Esq., (formerly the accredited citizen of Baltimore,) President, and R. W. ROGERS, Esq., (Cashier of the Bank of Virginia,) Treasurer. The Association will no doubt gladly receive contributions, and distribute them faithfully to the sufferers in both Norfolk and Portsmouth.

A subscription for the relief of the sufferers was started in Norfolk on Friday morning, and in less than two hours $2,300 was raised. The Herald thinks the amount will reach $3,000. The supply of provisions is becoming scarce, and it will not be long, says the Herald, before some of the afflicted will be suffering from starvation.

In this emergency, we are glad to notice that distant communities are already practically responding in a manner becoming the occasion. At Richmond, both provisions and money are being contributed, different parties being named with whom they are to be left; and at Petersburg last evening a public meeting was to be held for taking immediate steps to assist in affording the necessary relief to the sick and those who are overburdened with their charge. Let Baltimore act with due promptness, likewise.

Quarantine Regulations.

From the Baltimore Sun, Aug. 14.

It was currently reported yesterday that a Committee of citizens had waited upon the Mayor for the purpose of inducing him to adopt certain quarantine regulations in relation to vessels of all kinds coming from those ports where the yellow fever is said to be prevailing. The acting Mayor, however, up to a late hour yesterday evening, had not seen the Committee, and it is not likely that any change of quarantine regulations will grow out of any representations which may be made, as the authorities of the city are in possession of all facts emanating from responsible and official sources as to the progress of the disease elsewhere, and the liability to have it here as an epidemic, and have strictly quarantined, during the last ten days, all vessels coming from the infected ports. In this connection it may be stated that the Norfolk boats do not approach that port within thirty miles. The President of the Company, M. N. FALLS, Esq., has chartered a steamer, the Princess Anne, for the purpose of acting as a freighter for the boats between the port of Norfolk and Nansemond Bay, where they now stop.

United States Naval Hospital—The Sick.

From the Norfolk Beacon, Aug. 11.

The Hospital has not only the usual number of patients, who from having paid Hospital money under the provisions of the acts of Congress upon which it is founded, are entitled to its use; but the sick from Gosport and Portsmouth, who are sent there by the Sanitary Committee of Portsmouth, by the permission of the Secretary of the Navy. These patients are put into well-ventilated rooms, on clean beds and mattresses, and have the skill and unremitting attention of Dr. MINOR, the Surgeon at the Hospital, and his assistants, Passed Assistant Surgeon HARRISON and Assistant Surgeon STEELE, of the Navy. Three of the Sisters of Charity from St. Joseph's, Md., and from this city, are also in attendance on the sick, rendering their valuable aid in the cause of humanity. We are glad to learn that Dr. JOHN N. SCHOOLFIELD, Chairman of the Portsmouth Sanitary Committee, who has been under treatment at the Hospital, is getting better.

THE YELLOW FEVER AT NORFOLK AND PORTSMOUTH.—The steamer Louisiana, Capt. RUSSELL, arrived here on Saturday morning from Nansemond Bay, about thirty miles from Norfolk, with about 150 passengers, some of whom were from the far South, while a goodly number were from Norfolk and Portsmouth—fleeing thence on account of the prevalence of that human scourge, the yellow fever. Dr. MAUND, on the part of the Baltimore Board of Health, was on board, and permitted the residents to take passage for Baltimore, upon their exhibiting a certificate from the health physicians of those ports, certifying that the holder did not live in or near the infected places, and was also in the enjoyment of good health.

Dr. MAUND states that he received intelligence from a surgeon of the United States Navy to the effect that two cases of yellow fever had occurred on Thursday on board the big ship Pennsylvania, and that both patients had been removed to a vessel at anchor below Craney Island, where it was the intention of the commanding officer to send all others, should any more occur. Dr. MAUND did not receive any additional intelligence from Portsmouth, except that the fever was still making progress. The steamer Georgia, Capt PHARSON, arrived here yesterday morning, bringing over 200 passengers, a large number of whom were permitted to come up in the steamer by Dr. JOHN POWELL, one of the acting officers of our Board of Health, subject to the restrictions already named. Most of these passengers are business men of the two cities, who did not feel safe in remaining there any longer. Reliable intelligence received by the Georgia, states that 11 deaths and 17 new cases had occurred in Norfolk for the 24 hours preceding Saturday noon.

Some of the passengers of the Georgia left their homes four or five days ago in the hopes of finding good temporary quarters, but were forced to proceed to this city. They are now quartered at the principal hotels. As for the Baltimore Board of Health, they held a special meeting on Friday afternoon and again on Saturday morning, but in the language of one of the members, "did not transact any business of importance." Dr. KEMP, the City Physician, states officially that the plan which has been adopted appointing a competent physician to remain on each boat works admirably. Thus far Baltimore has escaped a visitation of the scourge in the form of an epidemic, and the only mortality in the city worth speaking of is the unusual prevalence of cholera infantum, which is confined to little children under five years of age.—Baltimore Sun.

DEATHS BY YELLOW FEVER.—We know of no man whose afflictions have been more severe, and who has greater cause to bewail the devastating effects of this besom of destruction than Mr. MILES B. GODWIN, one of the compositors in the Dispatch office. Two weeks since the father, mother, aunt, sister, brother, brother in-law, nephew and cousin of Mr. GODWIN, were all living in Gosport, doing well and enjoying good health. When the news reached this city that the yellow fever had made its appearance in that town, he consoled himself with the hope that the report was founded on an isolated case, carried there by some vessel, and knowing that his friends were temperate, prudent people, felt but little uneasiness for their safety. His feelings may be better imagined than described, when, a few days after, the telegraph brought the heart-rending news that his brother, FREDERICK A. GODWIN, in the bloom of youth, and with worldly prospects the most flattering, had been seized by the scourge and hastened from time to eternity. Mr. GODWIN impatiently awaited the dispatch on the following day, on the arrival of which he learned that his brother-in-law, Mr. P. E. GLENN, had also fallen a prey to the fever.

On the next day he learned that his sister, Mrs. ELIZABETH R. GLENN, and her infant child, had been stricken down by the same unrelenting enemy. The fourth victim was his cousin, Mrs. AMELIA JONES. Then fell his aunt, Mrs. MARY B. DREWRY, who, in turn, was speedily followed by her son, ARTHUR DREWRY, a lad about six years old. All, all were now gone save his mother and father, and a faint hope began to dawn on the mind's horizon that Death had satiated his appetite, and would spare them; but that hope was only momentary, for the next news that came informed Mr. GODWIN that his father, Mr. A. H. GODWIN had fallen a prey to the disease. Heart-rending as was the agony created by this last message, ere he received it, another and a more agonizing one told him that his mother, Mrs. ELIZA S. K. F. R. GODWIN, was no more.—Richmond Dispatch.

Cholera.

From the Elkton (Md.) Whig.

We mentioned in our last issue the fearful ravages made by the cholera at Perryville in the family of JOSEPH RAISIN, stating that he was then down with the disease. He has since died. The family consisted of husband, wife and six children. In a week's time all of them died except a small lad, who has recovered.

Three of the children were unwisely sent to the Alms House, where two of them died, and what is most unfortunate, they have infected the premises there, two of the inmates having since died of a similar disease—one on Wednesday and one yesterday. CHARLES BADGER, who died yesterday, against the positive orders of the Overseer, gorged himself with green corn and cucumber, and in a few hours was a corpse.

In Perryville a colored man died on Wednesday in the house adjoining where RAISIN lived.

Dr. TREADWELL, of Havre-de-Grace, who was called to see the RAISIN family, says there is no doubt about the disease being the Asiatic cholera. He was among it in New-York in 1832, and in other places since that time, and these cases are precisely similar in all their leading features.

Local causes undoubtedly produced it among the RAISINS. They had been living on unwholesome food; from the time cherries began to ripen, the children, who were poorly attended to, had been eating profusely of all kinds of fruit, ripe or unripe, as they could get it. The spring which furnished the family with water was close down to the river, where the tide flowed into it from an unwholesome cove. There had been a shad fishery there all the fore part of the season, and large quantities of shad had been opened in the neighborhood of the spring, their blood and ventralls being thrown down to pollute the ground and corrupt the water. The whole family had been for weeks afflicted with the diarrhœa, and the day before the first of them died, their dinner consisted of green cabbage, half rotten bacon and dumplings made of green apples, all boiled together in the same pot, of which they ate largely. With this history of their habits—which in other respects were those attendant on extreme poverty—the reader will not be surprised that but one of the family remains alive.

TERRIBLE RAVAGES OF THE CHOLERA.—Dr. BILLS died at St. Louis on Wednesday last, after a brief illness of cholera. Rev. Jos. L. DARROW fell a victim to the same disease at Collinsville, Ill., after an illness of seven hours.

The St. Louis News says: "We learn from Sullivan, Ill., that the town is deserted, there being but one family in the place which has not got the cholera, and that there will not be persons enough (unless the doctors do it) to bury the dead, as there are a number expected to die. About all who are able to leave, having become alarmed at the ravages committed by this scourge in their midst, have fled from the town. Some are in the country adjacent thereto, some are in Decatur, and others scattered elsewhere among their friends. The town has hitherto been considered very healthy, but from some cause or other the cholera is making a fearful sweep there now.

Fight in a Church.

Gallipolis (Ohio) Journal of last week has the following local religious intelligence: The Presbyterian Church in this place has been in possession of the Old-School body for some weeks past, and the New School, thinking they had occupied the building a sufficient length of time, on Saturday evening last made an attempt to retake it from that body. They succeeded in breaking a panel out of the back door, but the hole was not sufficiently large to admit a man's body. It appears that the Old School members were absent at the time, but while Mr. JOHN SMITHERS was endeavoring to effect an entrance Mr. HENRY MILLER, an outside member, remonstrated against the proceedings, and finally struck Mr. S. a severe blow on the head with his cane. Finding an entrance more difficult than they had imagined, they quietly dispersed. For the past ten days or two weeks the Church has been in charge of Capt. J. S. MYERS. On Sunday morning Rev. WARREN TAYLOR, the New School minister, took occasion to walk in while the door of the Church was temporarily thrown open, and ascend the pulpit. MYERS peremptorily ordered him to leave the house, but no attention was paid to him, when he repaired to the pulpit and ejected Mr. T. by force. Mr. T. offered no resistance further than to hold on to a knob that was attached to an ornament to the pulpit, and, breaking his hold of it, he lost his balance and fell over the railing to the floor, striking on his back. We do not know that he sustained any serious injury. The church has not been used for public worship since the Old School body has had possession of it. Since the difficulty, it is their determination to keep it closed until a legal decision may be had as to right of property.

Disorderly House.

A descent was made at a late hour last night, by the police of the Fourth Ward, upon the house No. 231 William street, being the same place in which JOHN LOVEJOY met with his death wound. The result of the foray was the arrest of JOHN VOCHE, the proprietor of the dance house. This house is notorious as a resort for the vilest prostitutes, and on two other occasions the proprietor has been taken before the Mayor and put under obligations to vacate.

False Imprisonment.

MARINE COURT.
Before Judge Birdsall.

This action was brought to recover damages for false imprisonment in causing the youthful plaintiff to be arrested on a charge of stealing watches. It appeared that Sarah was taken to the station-house on Forty-eighth-street, and confined there. The next day she was taken before Justice PERRY and discharged, the watches having been restored to the defendant. Under these circumstances the defendant was nonsuited, with an allowance of $10 and the costs.

A Fourth of July Spree.

MARINE COURT.
Before Judge Birdsall.

White & Butts vs. Jenkins.—This was an action to recover $275 as damages for the loss of a horse which was alleged to have died from the effects of over exertion in going from New-York to Coney Island on the glorious anniversary of the Fourth of July, &c. On the part of the plaintiffs it was in evidence that the defendant came to their stables and hired three horses and wagons for himself and friends to visit Coney Island and return by the way of Brooklyn. When the party reached the Ferry-boat en route to the City, the horse in question was put on board, but died before the boat could reach Wall-street. The defence set up that the horse which was the subject of this suit had not been hired by the defendant, and that even on the supposition that the animal's death was attributed to over exertion, the plaintiff could not recover, as the defendant was not in the vehicle to which the horse was harnessed. The case was tried and submitted on Monday, and yesterday his Honor gave a decision in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount claimed.

At the last Meeting of the Fire Department Fund Association of Jersey City, WM. B. DUHING was chosen Vice President of the Association.

Arrangements are being made for a parade of the Fire Department at some time during the month of October next.

An Outrage in Hoboken.

Towards evening yesterday three young men attached a young man, who had a young woman with him, in the Elysian Fields, and beat him, and committed an outrage upon the young woman. They were arrested, and taken before Justice BERNARD for examination. They assert that they had previously witnessed improprieties on the part of the young man and woman.

Fire Alarm Bell and Fire Alarm.

A new fire bell, weighing 500 pounds, which has been procured for the city of Hoboken, was tried yesterday. It was heard in Jersey City, and aroused the Fire Department, which repaired in haste to Hoboken, to assist in extinguishing the supposed conflagration.

Jersey City Common Council.

A regular meeting of the Jersey City Common Council was held last evening at the City Clerk's office—Alderman LYON in the Chair.

After the dispatch of the usual preliminary business, the Committee on Public Grounds and Buildings, to whom had been submitted the subject of a City Hall and Market, reported in favor of purchasing one of two plots of ground—viz: three lots on the south side of Newark-avenue, known as lots Nos. 71 and 72, each 25 feet front by 100 feet deep; and a lot connected therewith, fronting on Henderson-street, 50 feet by 60 in depth. This property belongs to JOHN H. BOGERT, and can be purchased for $6,000, on five years' time.

The other site belongs to D. S. GREGORY, and consists of four lots, each lot twenty feet front by ninety feet in depth, at the southeast corner of Gregory and Henderson streets. This property can be purchased for $7,250 on five years' time. The report was received, and, with resolutions accompanying authorizing this purchase, was laid upon the table.

A resolution was adopted requiring that all bills of $5 and upwards for the salaries of city officers, policemen, watchmen and lamp-lighters, shall be certified upon oath by the parties presenting them, was presented and laid on the table. After some further business the Board adjourned.

Correction.

Rumor seldom diminishes a tale. That got up by the partisans of the Irish military balls and excursions, from Jersey City, and which appeared in the TIMES of yesterday, is not only exaggerated, but in detail it is altogether incorrect. Rev. Mr. KELLY affirms that it is not true that he denounced "the military company," either "on last Sunday" or any other day or place, and that the statement of his entertaining animosity to the company and causing the Captain's pew to be painted, is malicious and false. The chief is an illiterate person, employed as cartman at a soap-factory, and is as liable to misunderstand the difference between argument and denunciation as any one else.

Yours, &c.

MARRIED.

TUESDAY, Aug. 14—P. M.

Our Stock market to-day displayed less activity and less firmness. The speculative feeling was not so distinct, and there was a fainter inquiry for securities from parties desirous to make permanent investments. In Federal and State Stocks there was a very limited business transacted at a little weaker prices. The Board sales of Railroad Bonds amounted to $213,000, including $130,000 Illinois Central Bonds, which opened at 86½ b30, but closed at 87¼; $56,000 Hudson Third Mortgage changed hands at steady rates. New-York Central Sixes realized only 91⅞; Erie Bonds of 1875, 91½ b60; Erie Second Mortgage, 100; and Panama Bonds, second issue, 109½. Railway Shares were moderately active at the early meeting of the Board, but dull and heavy during the afternoon session. The regular sales of the day reached over 12,000 Shares, including 4,013 Reading, 2,205 New-York Central, 1,425 Erie, 1,080 Michigan Central, and 850 Illinois Central,—all of which closed rather cheaper than yesterday. The trouble about New-York Central transfers, on the opening, will, we have reason to believe, be avoided, and the new plan of transfers will not probably go into operation before the 1st of September. Chicago and Rock Island Railroad fell off ¼ ⅌ cent., and Hudson River ⅛, Harlem ruled quiet and languid. Galena and Chicago opened at 111½, b3, but subsequently receded to 110¾—the latest quotation being 111, b30. Cleveland and Toledo were in moderate demand early in the day, but at rather easier prices. The market closed without spirit.

Money is quite freely offered at previous rates, with no visible improvement in the demand from borrowers of good standing. About $500,000 in Specie were sent forward this afternoon to Boston, for shipment in the Asia, sailing thence to-morrow for Liverpool. Foreign Exchanges were rather inactive, but Sterling Bills closed with increased firmness, at 109½@110, and Bills on Paris at 5.15 12½. The Sub-Treasury receipts to-day were $141,245, and the payments $142,474—leaving a regular balance, this afternoon, of $3,656,469. The payments for Assay-Office reached $244,693, and on Disbursing Checks $20,947. The amount of exchanges through the Clearing-House to-day was $15,534,913.

The new City Chamberlain, Mr. ROBERT KELLY,—having accepted the nomination and given the requisite security ($20,000) for the faithful performance of his duty,—was sworn into office by the Mayor this morning. This movement,—as we previously remarked,—guarantees a continuance of the City Deposits in the Mechanics' Bank. In this connection, we may as well mention that the letter of resignation of the office of City Chamberlain, addressed to the Mayor by Mr. F. W. EDMONDS,—its late occupant,—and the Mayor's answer thereto, the latter dated to-day, have been published. Mr. EDMONDS assures the Mayor his accounts correspond exactly with the accounts in the City Comptroller's department, and refers His Honor to the Municipal Treasurer, for a confirmation of their correctness. The Mayor replies that he finds Mr. EDMONDS' "accounts have been properly kept," and "every dollar entrusted to" his "custody has been faithfully accounted for." The May
